'Czar' Named To Double Rate of Plane Production

Nelson Appoints Charles E. Wilson To Head 'Little WPB' For Entire Industry

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

To supply the great number of airplanes necessary for victory, War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson has ordered this country's monthly aircraft production rate doubled within a year, he disclosed yesterday at a press conference.

The gigantic job has been given to WPB Vice Chairman Charles E. Wilson, who has been made "czar" of aircraft production and given all of Nelson's powers with respect to aircraft, the WPB chairman said.

Wilson will have jurisdiction over all Government agencies dealing with aircraft and will preside over a "little WPB for aircraft," along with representatives of Army and Navy air units, Nelson said.

Nelson Confident It Can Be Done

In the process of doubling production, the aircraft industry will begin producing planes at the rate of 30 to 40 billion dollars worth a year, more than seven times the peacetime production of the automobile industry, Nelson said.

Asked if he thought we would make the goal, Nelson stated:

"We certainly are going to try to double the production of aircraft. I think we can do it. We would not be doing our job unless we doubled the number of planes."

Nelson made it clear that by doubling the number of planes the United States would more than double the actual aircraft production because of the present emphasis on heavy types.

President Roosevelt originally called for 60,000 planes in 1942 and 125,000 in 1943, but recently announced that this year's goals had

'Count' Tomadelli Is Convicted in $500,000 Swindle

"Count" Juan J. Tomadelli, handsome 55-year-old gentleman of leisure, was convicted late yesterday on five counts of swindling two New Jersey businessmen out of nearly half a million dollars.

The District Court jury verdict, ending seven days of testimony in the "bottled sunshine" case, carries a maximum penalty of 25 years' imprisonment and $5000 in fines.

After the verdict was returned, Justice James M. Proctor denied a defense motion to allow Tomadelli to remain free on bond until he is sentenced. Instead, he was sent to District Jail.

The businessmen, Ernest M. Swingle and Massimo Antoniotti, the former a 10-cent store manager and the latter a wine merchant, testified they invested money with Tomadelli for 13 years in hopes that a wireless light bulb the "count" claimed he had invented would produce dividends. The funds, they said, maintained the defendant in luxury in a Shoreham Hotel suite.

Why Canada Was Opposed To Publicity

The Office of War Information and its predecessor, the Office of Facts and Figures, have handled publicity for the American Government for 13 months. Canada, which was in the war long before Pearl Harbor, set up its War Information Board only a few months ago. Why did Canada avoid publicity about its war effort? What were the effects of this silence? Janet Keith gives you the answers in today's Post. Each week Mrs. Keith writes a revealing article about a different problem confronting our northern neighbor. Poison Substance Found

Frozen Eggs Supplied by U. S. Kill 47 in Oregon Asylum

By the Associated Press

Salem, Oreg., Nov. 19.—A powerful mineral commonly used in insecticides was reported by investigators tonight as the poison which killed 47 inmates of the Oregon State Hospital for the Insane after they partook of a scrambled-egg dinner, made from frozen egg-yolk provided by the Federal Government.

Dr. J. C. Evans, hospital superintendent who made public the findings, said the poison was put into the eggs, but did not say when that occurred.

He said Dr. Joseph Beemans, director of the Oregon State Police, discovered the poison in bits of the eggs that were served to more than 2000 inmates at dinner last night. More than 450 became ill.

All were nauseated, complained of stomach cramps and paralysis of the legs. There was evidence also of respiratory paralysis.

Dr. Evans said an inmate kitchen helper assigned to prepare the eggs for cooking left the pot unattended for five or ten minutes while he went to the basement in search of powdered milk.

It was possible, the superintendent said, that a trusty inmate could have obtained the poison at a downtown Salem drugstore and put it into the batter. It was possible, also, he added, that the poison was mixed into a can or two in the packing plant in Chicago, where the consignment, turned over to the asylum by the Federal Surplus Commidities Corporation, originated.

Dr. Frank Menne, University of Oregon Medical School bacteriologist, who also was seeking identity of the poison, said he fed bits of egg yolks taken at random from cans in the consignment to rats. They survived. They died in three to five minutes, however, when fed bits of eggs taken from plates of the diners.

Since eggs similarly packed and distributed by the Government, perhaps even some from the same general consignment, were known to have reached other institutions here and in Washington State, Federal authorities quickly ordered experts from the food and drug administration into the investigation.

The frozen egg yolks were distributed last spring by the United States Department of Agriculture as surplus commodities. Hundreds of pounds from the same consignment had been eaten previously

War-Fund Lag Taken Up With Board of Trade

Graham Asks Business Leaders to Speed Recanvass of Gifts

The problem of lack of response to the Community War Fund drive from several hundred business, financial and commercial organizations in Washington was laid before the Washington Board of Trade last night by Edwin C. Graham, general chairman of the War Fund.

Speaking at a meeting at Willard Hotel, Mr. Graham suggested that every business leader present give priority to a recanvass of all gifts from every source within their firms, to report complete coverage and a 100 per cent employe, executive and firm giver response in time for the next campaign report meeting on Tuesday.

When plans for uniting 120 home front and war relief appeals in a single Community War Fund campaign were first considered, the Washington Board of trade officially endorsed the project, Graham reminded the business leaders.

Outlines Unit Standings

Emphasizing that the campaign now stands at 84 per cent of the goal, he outlined the standings of the three soliciting units, asking that his audience let the figures "sink into your hearts."

The Group Solicitation Unit, through which business firms are represented, has now received 75 per cent of the $1,285,000 quota assigned—with 25 per cent, or about $300,000 still to be subscribed, he pointed out.

"As a whole the response has been wonderful, with many firms and their employes far exceeding the level of any previous response," Graham delared.

"But records at campaign headquarters show several hundred business, financial and commercial organizations from which no reports have been received on either the firm gifts or on subscriptions from employes . . ."

Graham urged that each business and professional man go into "individual conference with his own conscience," considering all over again his own subscription to the

Truce to End Tax Filibuster Sidetracked

Chandler's Objection Mars Senate Poll Tax Peace Treaty Scene

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

The terms of an armistice by which the Senate's anti-poll tax filibuster, now six days old, was to have been brought to a close early next week were signed, sealed and delivered on the Senate floor yesterday—until Senator Chandler (Democrat) of Kentucky, jumped up from his back row seat and shouted:

"I object."

Despite Chandler's objection which, he said, was entered because he felt the truce would set a "bad precedent," it was believed that a pact similar to the one proposed—and all but agreed to—may be made privately by which the filibuster will be ended and the anti-poll tax bill shelved early next week.

Final Terms

The final terms of the truce that was to have ended the bitterest Senate feud in recent years were these:

Foes of the measure were to have abandoned their delaying action to allow the bill, at long last, formally to come before the Senate for debate. Backers of the legislation were to have taken the necessary steps to bring up a motion to invoke the Senate's rules for shutting off debate. The vote on the motion was to have been taken by 1 p. m. Monday. If the "gag" or "cloture" rule were defeated, the bill was to have been considered dead for the remainder of the session.

The thing to remember about the treaty is this: Both Senator Connally (Democrat) of Texas, leading the filibuster, and Senator Barkley of Kentucky, the majority leader, were fully aware that there were more than enough votes in the Senate to beat cloture. The determined bloc of anti-poll tax bill foes were understood to be certain of at least 40 votes against cloture which may not be invoked unless approved by two-thirds of

Market Grows Blacker

OPA Probers Uncover More Gas-Bootlegging Evidence

("Don't Travel" Drive Opened; Gas Card Rules Announced, Page 11.)

OPA investigators engaged in an effort to smash "black market" operations in gasoline have uncovered evidence of "slightly more than 100" violations of the fuel rationing regulations in the District, OPA officials disclosed.

The evidence was uncovered after an inspection of approximately 150 local filling stations, it was learned.

A drive to tighten up regulations forbidding gasoline dealers to accept loose coupons from their customers may be expected to result from the investigations, an OPA official said. A considerable number of the violations would have been impossible if dealers had adhered strictly to the rule requiring them to tear out all coupons from ration books themselves, it was said.

Enforcement also is expected to improve when dealers get accustomed to requiring motorists to write license numbers on the back of each coupon, it was said.

The 100 violations figure represents a cumulative total since the investigation started last Saturday. No new violations were uncovered yesterday.

Many of the violations are considered trifling, although dealers involved in other violations face possible suspension of their right to receive gasoline, as well as criminal prosecution.

Some of the investigations revealed that dealers have accumulated a supply of extra coupons, "giving them some coupons to play with," permitting the sale of some fuel to favored customers without requiring them to turn in coupons.

Allies' Tanks Roll Forward In Tunisia

British Victorious In First Armored Clash; Barre Spurns Threat, Attacks Nazis

BULLETIN

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Nov. 19 (AP).—American and British mechanized units have smashed their way to within 35 miles of the Axis Tunisian stronghold of Bizerte after scattered clashes with German patrols.

By the Associated Press

London (Friday), Nov. 20.—Allied troops were reported rolling deeper into Tunisia early today after British tank troops in their first armored clash with the Axis on this battleground destroyed 8 of 30 Nazi tanks seeking to bar their way.

Inside Tunisia itself the French commander, General Barre, was said to have opened a general offensive of his own at dawn yesterday against the German and Italian occupying forces.

The Moroccan radio, which told of the first tank clash, said it occurred Tuesday, and that the Germans withdrew after their losses.

"A few British antitank guns and heavy guns were put out of action," the radio broadcast added.

Evidence that the Axis still was trying to pour as many troops as possible into Tunisia was seen in the Moroccan radio's announcement that the Nazis had landed several light tanks and 200 airborne infantry at Gabes, eastern Tunisian coastal city about 100 miles from the Libyan border.

Aimed at Blocking Yanks

This maneuver apparently was aimed at blocking an American column reported driving into southern Tunisia toward Gabes in an effort to encircle the Axis troops in the Bizerte-Tunis area, and also strike directly at Marshal Rommel's main base of Tripoli in Libya.

The radio said the Germans occupied the Gabes town hall and barrack despite French resistance. Gabes is near the northen end of the Mareth or "little Maginot Line" which the French had built near

Petain Pleads With French to Resist Allies

Marshal's Utterance Adds Only Confusion To Nation's Problem

By Ernest Agnew
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Nov. 19.—Marshal Philippe Petain called on all Frenchman in North Africa tonight "to resist the Anglo-Saxon aggression," and Fighting French sources here saw this as fresh evidence of Dictator Pierre Laval's calculated efforts to steer his country into outright military alliance with Germany.

The 86-year-old marshal, who yesterday gave Laval full political powers and designated him as his heir presumptive, said in a broadcast from Axis-occupied Vichy:

"Frenchmen: General officers in the service of a foreign power refused to obey my orders. General officers, noncommissioned officers, soldiers of the French army: Do not obey these unworthy leaders."

The marshal was referring to Admiral Jean Darlan, ousted successor to Petain and Laval's political enemy, who has gone over to the Allies in North Africa, and other French leaders such as Gen. Henri Honore Giraud, who escaped from a Nazi prison and then from Vichy to fight again.

"I reiterate to you the order to resist the Anglo-Saxon aggression," continued the aged marshal, whose prestige derived mainly from fighting the Germans at Verdun in the last World War.

Vessel Once Given Up For Lost in Terrific Battle Off Guadalcanal

By Ted Meier
Associated Press Staff Writer

Philadelphia, Nov. 19.—The American light cruiser Boise, survivor of one of the Navy's most dazzling sagas, came home from the Solomon Islands war zone today with the unparalleled achievement of having sunk or helped to sink 6 Japanese warships in 27 minutes of deadly close-range firing on the night of October 11-12.

Admiral Ernest J. King, commander in chief of the United States Fleet, flew here from Washington to greet Capt. E. J. ("Mike") Moran of San Francisco as the 10,000-ton battle-scarred Boise, once given up for lost, docked at the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

A band blared "Hold That Tiger," and sailors on nearby ships cheered and threw their hats into the air as the cruiser came in. Proudly painted on her bridge were six miniature Jap ships—her score in the night action off Cape Esperance, near Guadalcanal. Smiling crew members lined the decks, anxious to set foot on American soil for the first time in five months.

Nineteen members of the crew were decorated for bravery in action.

Lieut. Comdr. William C. Butler, jr., was given the Navy Cross. He lived in Washington with his wife and his four-year-old son, Warner Lewis Butler, at 3917 Kansas Avenue Northwest. A native of Virginia, Commander Butler was graduated from Central High School and from the Naval Academy at Annapolis in 1930. While at the Academy, he was a member of the swimming team and was prominently known in the Capital.

Lieutenant Commander Butler was decorated for heroism in commanding the guns and searchlights from an exposed position. The citation said he "performed his duties in a cool and efficient manner, exposing himself to enemy gunfire."

In the engagement, the Boise was in the vanguard of a cruiser-de-

Reds Kill 5000, Smash Nazis' Caucasus Push

Six German Units Routed; Stalingrad Defenders Repel Blows

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Friday, Nov. 20.—A counterattacking Red army killed 5000 Germans in a battle lasting several days outside Ordzhonikidze, northern entrance to the Georgian military highway leading through the Caucasus Mountains, the Soviets announced last night in a special communique.

The regular midnight war bulletin also told of stalwart Russian fighting at all other key sectors of the long front, particularly Stalingrad, where six German attacks were repulsed.

In one sector of the Volga River city the Germans "succeeded in occupying a few demolished houses at a cost of great losses," but this was the only slight Nazi gain.

The Russians said they inflicted "a severe defeat" on the Germans on the approaches to Ordzhonikidze.

This was the first indication that the Caucasian fighting had reached the vicinity of Ordzhonikidze, which lies 60 miles southeast of Nalchik and about the same distance south of Mozdok, previously known centers of action.

Severe Defeat for Nazis

The Russians said they had inflicted a severe defeat on the Germans.

They routed the Thirteenth German Tank Division, the Brandenburg Regiment, the Forty-fifth Battalion, the Seventh Sapper Battalion, the 525th Division of the Nazi Antitank Defense and a battalion of the First German Infantry Division, said an official announcement read over the Moscow radio.

The Germans, the announcement said, left more than 5,000

Registration of Women Urged By Unions as a War Measure

By Ann Cottrell
Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

A national registration of women for war work, not only was indorsed and urged for the first time publicly by organized labor yesterday, but members of the C. I. O.-A. F. of L. Labor War Board, after a conference with President Roosevelt, predicted steps for a registration would be taken before the end of the year.

A. F. of L. President William Green said at the White House yesterday that he expected announcement about the registration of women within the next two weeks.

Neither he nor C. I. O. President Philip Murray would reveal whether the registration of women would be voluntary or compulsory. It is assumed, however, that it will be voluntary.

President Roosevelt announced several weeks ago that mandatory registration would require legislation. If steps are going apace now for registration, it was pointed out there is not enough time for legislation authorizing compulsory registration by the end of this year.

Mr. Green, convinced that "the matter is becoming pressing," estimated that from 40 to 50 million women would be registered.

This registration, voluntary or compulsory, is in no way a draft of women, it was indicated, but is the only means of ascertaining a true picture of American womanpower.

In England women between 18 and 45 years of age have been obliged to register at the local offices of the Ministry of Labor. All of them are called for interview, except those already engaged in vital war work and those with children under 14 years of age living with them. Following the interview appropriate work is indicated, and the woman must follow the directions.

District Traffic Toll Rises To 95, Equaling 1941 Total

D. C. traffic deaths this year.. 95
Deaths this date last year.... 82
District total last year..... 95

Washington's official traffic toll equaled last year's total—95—last night and experts predicted the accident fatality record this year would be the highest since 1935.

Death of a 70-year-old Negro pedestrian yesterday and a verdict from a coroner's jury in a pedestrian death last Friday added two new fatalities to the count.

At the present death rate—an average of 9 or 10 monthly—it is expected this year's total will reach 110. In 1935 the total was 113 and the toll has not exceeded 100 since 1937, when 106 deaths were registered.

Yesterday's victim was Edward F. Janifer, Negro, 70, of 1146 Sixth Street Northwest. He was struck and killed instantly by a streetcar in the 1400 block U Street Northwest at 2:10 a. m.

Operator of the trolley was listed by police as Charles E. Hinson, 32, 532 Fourteenth Street Southeast. He has had three years of experience.

The death of Mrs. Carrie M. Cronin, 57, of 2227 Twentieth Street Northwest was added to the traffic list when a coroner's jury returned a verdict of "accidental traffic death."

She died at Casualty Hospital last Friday after falling from the curbstone of Wyoming Avenue Northwest, between Nineteenth Street and Columbia Road, into a passing automobile.

Decision in the case was left to the jury when investigators were unable to determine whether the machine struck her. She died of a fractured skull and broken ribs.

The Score Mounts

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Five Japanese warships were sunk and three others damaged in a fierce night battle between heavyweights of the American and Nipponese fleets off Guadalcanal November 14-15, the Navy announced late yesterday.

Big United States battleships, making their first appearance in the Pacific fighting, fought a Jap surface force which also included dreadnaughts, and gave it a bad beating, it was disclosed.

Still other Japanese naval losses were reported officially later last night when Gen. Douglas MacArthur's headquarters in Australia announced that American heavy bombers had sunk a cruiser and a destroyer off Gona, New Guinea, and had damaged another destroyer, causing it to flee.

An Even Greater Victory

Sent to the bottom by the 16-inch shells of the American battlewagons and the torpedoes and smaller guns of supporting destroyers and cruisers, were the following enemy war vessels:

One battleship or heavy cruiser.
Three large cruisers.
One destroyer.

Japanese ships damaged in the engagement—the last phase of the major American naval victory in the Solomons, November 13-15—were a battleship, a cruiser and a destroyer.

This made the smashing defeat of the Jap forces assume even greater proportions than was indicated in the first report of the battle Monday.

The Navy said that it was possible that yesterday's report of blows struck the enemy may partially duplicate the toll of 23 ships sunk and 7 damaged listed in the earlier communique.

Officers here, however, were personally confident that most or all of the ships sunk in the November 14-15 night action were in addition to those reported previously. Clarification of this point must await the receipt here of a complete summary of the entire battle.

No Further U. S. Losses Given

The Navy communique made no report on American losses in the Saturday night battleship slugfest, but a spokesman said that the report in Monday's communique

Franco Warns Both Sides on Seizure Of Spanish Bases

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Generalissimo Francisco Franco of Spain has informed both the Axis and the United Nations that Spain immediately would accept aid from the other side if any of her sea and air bases were seized, informed European diplomatic sources reported tonight.

There was no confirmation from European sources of a rumor that the Germans already had asked for use of the Mediterranean coast and the Balearic air bases jointly with an Italian request for the use of Balearic and coastal submarine bases.

There were, however, persistent reports that Franco acted before such requests came.

The Balearic Islands lie in the Mediterranean, off Spain's east coast, between France and North Africa.

Japs Penned Against Sea on New Guinea

Leads Battle Force In Naval Victory

REAR ADMIRAL W. A. LEE, JR., of Owenton, Ky., led a task force of American battleships to victory over a Jap surface force in the Solomons during the night of November 14-15

Enemy May Quit Buna Base, Now Within Allies Grasp

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in Australia, Friday, Nov. 20.—Allied land forces have the retreating Japanese in northeastern New Guinea with their backs against the sea between Gona and Buna, the Allied high command announced today.

"Our ground forces have rapidly closed in," the communique said regarding the fight for control of New Guinea, "and now pin the enemy down in the narrow coastal strip from Gona to Buna. We are fighting on the outskirts of both places."

The new advance, with Gen. Douglas MacArthur personally on hand for the killing thrusts, placed the Allies within grasp of their first important harbor on New Guinea's north shore. It brought nearer the climax of a drive across jungle trails of the Owen Stanley mountains which began late in September.

Possession of Buna would put the Allies within menacing reach of two other north New Guinea bases of the Japs, Lae and Salamaua, and would place them closer to the island of New Britain, with its much-bombed Jap base at Rabaul.

Earlier dispatches said the appearance of eight enemy destroyers off Buna had aroused speculation that the Japanese, who have suffered upward of 3000 casualties in that area in less than three weeks, might be preparing to evacuate their beachhead on the northeastern New Guinea coast.

American Flying Fortresses were prowling the coast in search of the destroyers, which played a grim game of hide-and-seek in the mist and rain squalls hanging low over the coast.

It was recalled that in late August the Japanese pulled a similar maneuver during the battle of Milne Bay. They landed an invasion force and then a few days later destroyers appeared in the area. As it turned out, the destroyers were sent to rescue the trapped invaders.

7 More Japanese Warships Sunk

that only two United States light cruisers and six destroyers were sunk in the three-day battle included this phase of the engagement.

And last night, Elmer Davis, director of the Office of War Information, said in a radio address that every major loss of an American ship had been announced.

Yesterday's communique was based on reports received from Rear Admiral Willis A. Lee, jr., who commanded the task force of battleships, cruisers and destroyers taking part.

Lee, who was assistant chief of staff here to the Fleet commander in chief, Admiral Ernest J. King, until recently, is one of the Navy's leading experts on gunnery.

He won the individual rifle and pistol championships at the National Rifle Matches while a midshipman in 1907, and has been captain of the Navy team competing in those matches in later years. Many of his shore duty assignments have been in the Division of Fleet Training here analyzing and supervising the gunnery practice of the fleet warships.

Battleships' Big Night

Naval officers said that while no reports have been received here of American battleships being in action in the battle prior to Saturday night, they were in the area and may have taken part in the fight two nights earlier.

Saturday night, however, was the battlewagons' big show, it appears, just as Thursday night was to all indications a victory won by daring United States cruiser and destroyer forces.

The dreadnaughts probably clashed in Solomon waters just northwest of Savo and Guadalcanal. While few details were given in the communique, officers declared that the opposing battleships must have fired their big shells while some 30,000 yards apart.

Between them would be screens of cruisers and destroyers firing 8, 6 and 5 inch guns. The destroyers of each force normally would be in the forefront, waiting for an opportunity to dart in at high speed and launch one of their deadly torpedoes at an opposing heavy ship.

Battleships in Action First Time

This is the first time American battleships have been reported in a surface action with the Japs, though our big ships are understood to have bombarded French Moroccan forts in the African campaign.

The Navy said nothing as to the identity of the American battleships fighting under Admiral Lee's command, but the Japanese radio has reported that vessels of the new 35,000-ton North Carolina class took part in the battle. The enemy claimed that one of this type as well as one of the older Idaho class of American battleships were damaged in the fight.

The North Carolina was put in service early this year. It is some 8 to 10 knots faster than the older battleships and its nine 16-inch guns are more powerful than those on the earlier ships.

Whether Japan sent any of its modern dreadnaughts into the battle is not known. Monday's communique said that the enemy battleship sunk and the one damaged were of the pre-World War I Kongo class, 29,000-ton craft mounting 14-inch guns. The battleships mentioned in yesterday's report were not identified.

Despite the Jap losses, Navy chiefs expect the Nipponese to make another attempt to recapture the southern Solomons, probably within a month.

Would Have to Risk Main Fleet

With a possible four battleships out of action, and perhaps eight cruisers and six destroyers sunk and other warships damaged, Japan would have to risk a showdown with its main battle fleet, heretofore not in action, to hope for success next time.

Text of the Navy communique, No. 195, follows:

"South Pacific (All dates are East Longitude):

"1. Reports just received from the South Pacific reveal that U. S. battleships took part in the action between United States surface forces and Japanese surface forces in the Gaudalcanal area during the night of November 14-15.

2. Rear Admiral W. A. Lee, jr., U. S. N., who commanded a Task Force, which included battleships, has reported that his force engaged a Japanese surface force in the Guadalcanal area during the night of November 14-15 and inflicted the following damage on the enemy:

"(a) 1 battleship (or heavy cruiser) sunk.
"(b) 3 large cruisers sunk.
"(c) 1 destroyer sunk.
"(d) 1 battleship damaged.
"(e) 1 cruiser damaged.
"(f) 1 destroyer damaged.

"3. It is possible that this report of damage may include some of the damage already reported in Navy Department communique No. 194. Clarification on this point must await the receipt of a complete summary of the action from the commander of naval forces in that area."

The Boise's Heroic Skipper

CAPT. E. J. (MIKE) MORAN

Moran, Boise's Skipper, Is Hard Hitter

It was a cool, hard-hitting Chicago-born naval officer who commanded the cruiser Boise in her daring fight in the Solomon Islands a month ago and then brought the badly battered ship safely home to the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

He is Capt. Edward Joseph Moran, 49, who, before entering the Navy, seeing duty all over the world, and making his home in San Francisco, attended Crane Technical School in Chicago, and the University of Illinois at Urbana.

Born August 15, 1893, Captain Moran, in 1913, accepted an appointment to the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Immediately after graduation in 1917 he was assigned to the destroyer Beale at Queenstown, Ireland, and served on her during the last war.

After the war he served on two other destroyers, and then put in two years, 1922 to 1924, as regimental officer at the Naval Academy.

His next duty was aboard the cruiser Pittsburgh in European waters, after which he won the Medal of Merit with the silver star from the Government of Nicaragua for his participation in the Nicaraguan campaign.

From 1927 to 1929 he commanded the naval recruiting station at San Francisco. Then, as a lieutenant, he served aboard the seaplane tender Langley, which was sunk by the Japs in the battle of the Coral Sea last May.

From 1932 to 1934 Captain Moran was in charge of officer training at the University of Washington, Seattle, and then became engineering officer aboard the battleship Nevada. He joinnel his present ship, the Boise, in May of 1940 as her executive officer. Last January he was given command of the Boise.

New Carrier Wasp To Honor Sunk Ship

A new American aircraft carrier will be named the Wasp in honor of the last ship of that name which was sunk by the Japanese in the Solomon Islands fighting September 15, the Navy announced yesterday.

The announcement said that the carrier Oriskany, now building at the Quincy, Mass. plant of the Bethlehem Steel Co., will be renamed the Wasp. The original Wasp, completed in 1940, was built at the same plant.

stroyer task force that intercepted a Japanese force attempting to land troops. She fired more than 1000 rounds of 5- and 6-inch shells that helped destroy two Japanese heavy cruisers, one light cruiser and three destroyers.

Then an enemy 8-shell tore into the hull 9 feet below the waterline. Her magazine exploded, killing 107 officers and men. Her sister ships gave her up for lost when mast-high flames enveloped her.

But Captain Moran and his crew flooded the exploded magazine, put out the fire, plugged the shell holes with bedding and two hours later came steaming through the night at 20 knots to rejoin the task force.

Small wonder that the navy yard workers and seamen aboard other vessels cheered themselves hoarse when the Boise was warped alongside a pier at 1:28 p. m.

was well done," declared Admiral King to the assembled crew on the quarterdeck after he was piped on board. "I want you to get your ship in shape and get back there as quickly as possible."

The Admiral decorated 12 officers and men for their valor in action.

Captain Moran praised his crew and their efficient work under fire.

"I feel more nervous here than during the fighting," he said.

The Boise and her sister ships had been ordered to stop sneak Japanese troop landings at night upon Guadalcanal Island.

"On October 11," the Navy statement continued. "The Boise and sister ships were patiently waiting outside the range of enemy air reconnaissance when United States planes spotted an enemy task force steaming at high speed toward Guadalcanal. That evening the Boise was in a column of cruisers with a destroyer screen, knifing along at 25 knots. The sea was smooth, with long swells running.

"Six enemy ships soon were sighted to starboard. Captain Moran trained his main battery on the leading heavy ship, his antiaircraft batteries on a smaller one, then gave the order to fire. "In a matter of seconds the first target lit up. She sank in four minutes, with screws still turning.. Shortly the second ship broke in two and sank. One minute later a third ship exploded and disappeared. Sixty seconds later the shifty Boise was concentrating everything her guns would throw on a fourth target. This contact lasted four minutes and the Boise took a hit from an 8-inch shell and several hits from 5-inch shells that demolished the captain's cabin.. But in short order the enemy exploded violently several times and was not seen again."

After two minutes the Boise's murderous fire hit the fifth Japanese ship. Fires were observed burning, then she disappeared.

Five minutes later two torpedoes missed the Boise by inches. Then Captain Moran directed fire at the sixth enemy target. The enemy ship blew up under the fire of the Boise and other ships.

British Victorious in First Tank Clash in Tunisia

the Libyan border. Most of its fortifications are said to be aimed eastward, however, toward Italian Libya, since it was constructed before the war in anticipation of a possible Fascist attack.

A delayed dispatch direct from Rabat, where the Moroccan radio is located, confirmed that station's previous announcement that the Sultan of Morocco and French Resident Gen. Auguste Nogues had pledged their cooperation to Maj. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., United States commander in western Morocco.

This was expected to release large numbers of United States troops for the drive eastward against the Axis. French troops from the Oran region already are en route toward Tunisia to join the Allies.

The Moroccan radio's report concerning General Barre, French Tunisian commander, said Gen. Walther Nehring, Axis commander, had handed Barre an ultimatum ordering the French under his command to withdraw from Tunisia or join the Axis in an attempt to stop Lieut. Gen. K. A. N. Anderson's British first army.

Spurning the German threat that he would be attacked if he failed to comply, the report said, General Barre ordered his provincial forces to attack first early today. The French troops wherever possible joined the British and American advance elements in preliminary skirmishes with Axis forces defending Tunis, the capital city, and Bizerte, the great French-built naval stronghold.

General Barre notified the German commander that he would defend himself in accordance with orders received from Admiral Jean Darlan and Gen. Henri Giraud, French leaders cooperating with British and American occupation forces. The German radio last night intimated that the French Tunisian commander had joined the Allies.

Allied headquarters declined for another day to issue any word that might forewarn Axis forces as to where the impending blow, or blows, will fall in Tunisia, contenting itself with the terse statement that there "was nothing new to report."

Advance Forces Clash

The Berlin radio, in the first German report of contact between ground forces in Tunisia, said advance forces had met along the coast just east of the Algerian border.

From Oran, French troops who only a week ago were fighting bravely against Allied landing forces were en route east to join their new French and British allies in the coordinated drive to smash the last remaining Axis armies in North Africa. In full battle gear, the Oran division entrained yesterday after a parade down an honor aisle formed by United States infantrymen.

Even as the rush of French forces to the Allied side promised to become a flood, aged Marshal Petain over the German-controlled Vichy radio was reiterating his order to resist "Anglo-Saxon aggression" and to disregard the orders of their "unworthy chief," Admiral Darlan, and other French leaders.

Well to the East, in Libya, the British Eighth Army was harrying the rear guards of Marshal Erwin Rommel below Bengasi.

Allied armies of undisclosed size were rolling in upon the Axis from three general directions, while behind them more men and supplies were moving into rear bases.

In Axis preparation for the showdown in Tunisia, the Berlin radio claimed that Axis troops were occupying further sectors of Tunisia "without incident" after taking the Bizerte naval base.

But Allied moves pointed to a slow accumulation of power necessary to crush the Axis in North Africa. Parachute troops have begun an infiltration of vital points; the spearheads are carefully feeling their way through the Tunisian mountains and flats and key airfields have been seized.

The Allied drive from the west appeared, in fact, to be made up of three columns—one along the Tunisian coastal road and two others piercing Tunisia farther south, possibly in the direction of Sfax and Kairwan. The British Eighth Army pushing the battered troops of Marshal Erwin Rommel formed the second side of the squeeze.

The third was reported pressing up from Lake Chad, Fighting French stronghold 1200 miles to the south in French Equatorial Africa.

The climax of Rommel's long retreat across western Egypt and Libya appeared near with the announcement that a fast-moving wing of Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery's British Eighth Army had struck the coast at a point 50 miles south of Bengasi after by-passing that important port.

This apparently cut off any German and Italian troops left in the Bengasi sector and placed the British vanguard within about 110 miles of El Aghelia, where the German leader was expected to make a stand on a strategic 30-mile front. Virtually the only alternative would be flight through Tripolitania in an attempt to join the Axis forces in Tunisia.

The German radio said "Rommel's movements become ever more exemplary in this difficult tactical operation," and declared that the British were being slowed both by a shortage of food and fuel and by staunch German and Italian rearguard action.

German sappers, the report said, were further handicapping the British advance by blowing up bridges along the coastal road and planting mine fields. The radio did not speculate on whether Rommel would make a stand at El Aghelia.

Meanwhile, Lieut. Gen. Kenneth A. N. Anderson's British First Army and cooperating units were reported driving into Tunisia from Algeria at several points in a sweep to trap the Germans and Italians at Tunis, the capital, and at Bizerte. American and British parachute troops were grabbing important air bases ahead of the advancing Allied columns.

From Lake Chad, the Allied Fighting French column was reported 940 miles from Tripoli.

Allied bombers and fighters were in almost complete control of the air. Following yesterday's attack on Bizerte by a formation of Brig. Gen. James H. Doolittle's Flying Fortresses and the R.A.F.-American destructive blow at Bengasi, British bombers carried their heavy loads over the Alps for the month's fifth attack on Italy's ports and industries. Turin, site of the royal arsenal and the Fiat airplane works, was blasted heavily. Not a British plane was lost.

British Close In On Axis Stragglers

Rear Guard Fight for Tripolitania Looms; Allied Planes Rain Death on Axis Exodus

By Paul Kern Lee
Associated Press Staff Writer

Cairo, Nov. 19.—A swift British column has by-passed the Libyan hump and reached a point 50 miles south of Bengasi, threatening the Axis stragglers racing desperately on today toward El Agheila for a prospective rear-guard fight for Tripolitania.

The southern arm of the pursuing British was in the Antelat section, 80 miles northeast of El Agheila and 15 miles from the Gulf of Sirte, and overlooking the coastal road from Bengasi to Agedabia.

Imperial forces in the north were pressing vigorously along the coastal road toward Bengasi, while British and United States planes spewed explosive death on the disordered Axis exodus. Remnants of Marshal Erwin Rommel's force had lost most of their arms in the 600-mile flight from El Alamein.

Medium bombers based on Malta flew the Mediterranean bottleneck to Tunis and attacked the German-held airdrome from which Axis planes are operating against the eastbound British First Army's advance on Bizerte and Tunis from Algeria. Runways and hangars were hit and fires started. Malta's fighters ranged also to the Sicilian fountainhead of Axis air power for North Africa, destroying a German bomber over the big Italian island.

The frantic efforts of the Germans and Italians to save something in North Africa was highlighted by the enemy's use of big transport planes to rescue men from the Bengasi area, flying them south to Magrum.

Seven Junkers 52's were shot down on their ferry route and three others were destroyed and 20 damaged on the ground at Bengasi. Earlier, in the Barce sector, a transport and a Heinkel were destroyed.

United States and British planes attacked Bengasi at dusk yesterday, starting fires. They observed several large fires already set by Axis demolition crews and two ships afire off the end of the central mole near the harbor entrance. This indicated Rommel might be trying to block the harbor.

The rapid British drive in Libya narrowed to 670 miles the distance between the Eighth Army and the Southern Tunisian frontier with Algeria, and reports of a strong Fighting French column moving up the Sahara from Lake Chad toward Tripoli foreshadowed a new peril for Rommel's retreat. The French were reported to be 940 miles from Tripoli, which lies 400 miles west of El Agheila.

British Say Nazi Officers Plot Against Hitler

By Robert E. Bunnelle
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Nov. 19 (AP).—The turn of the tide for the United Nations from North Africa to the Solomons, plus Adolf Hitler's strategic errors and party favoritisms, were reported here today to have led a strong group of dissident German generals into a subversive movement to sacrifice the Fuehrer and the Nazis and gain a peace favorable to their own class.

The junta, reputedly led by Field Marshal General von Brauchitson and Field Marshal General Fedor von Bock, both of whom were ousted from command by Hitler, is said by a responsible foreign diplomatic source here to have begun "isolation" of the Fuehrer.

Feelers are being put out by the generals to determine how the United Nations would respond to an offer of peace from a "de-Nazified" Germany, the report declares, the junta having become convinced that it is impossible for the Axis to win the war.

The foreign diplomatic source who cannot be further identified but who said he believed his information was reliable, said some members of the military clique were "deliberately provoking Hitler's ire" so as to be dismissed or relegated from places of responsibility in order to be able to blame him (Hitler) for the disasters last winter in Russia.

Von Brauchitsch was dismissed as army commander in chief last winter after counseling against the winter campaign against Moscow. Von Bock was fired in the midst of the drive against Stalingrad this fall.

Also reported to be members of the junta were Gen. Franz Halder, Gen. Fritz Erich von Mannstein, Field Marshal Gen. Karl Rudolf Gerd von Rundstedt and Gen. Johannes Blaskowitz.

R.A.F. Pounds War Plants In Turin Area

By Alfred E. Wall
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Nov. 19. — Sweeping across the Alps by bright moonlight, big British Lancasters and Halifaxes smashed at Italy last night for the fifth time this month, bombing from virtually unbroken formations the war production center of Turin.

Not one raider was lost in the 1500-mile round trip. One of the principal targets, lighted by the moon and the R. A. F.'s shower of flares, was the Fiat Airplane Motor Works. Also at Turin are the Royal Arsenal and a branch of the Caproni works.

The big industrial center on the Po River stood out like a floodlit city, the air ministry news service reported. At one time seven Halifaxes made their bomb runs wingtip to wingtip.

The pilot of one Halifax commented that "it was even brighter than at Genoa the night before last."

"Streets and bridges stood out clearly," he said. "We stayed around the city for about half an hour and I saw the fires increase rapidly. There was plenty of flak (antiaircraft fire) at the beginning, but it died down toward the end. I didn't see a single searchlight."

A Lancaster pilot added that "buildings went up like mushrooms" as the raiders dropped their bombs—some of them the two-tonners. "A great pall of smoke hung over half the town," he said.

The Italian high command reported "considerable damage to civilian houses" and said 24 persons were killed and 52 injured.

Turin last was raided two nights in succession, on October 22 and 23. Most of the raids this month have been concentrated upon Genoa.

Observers in London noted that the air war of Western Europe has taken on an aspect recently of one way traffic—toward Axis objectives.

While alleged fighters and bombers have been maintaining an almost nonstop offensive, there has been no night attacks against Britain for 18 nights, and no enemy plane over the country by daylight for 12 days.

Willkie Says He Dropped Reference to Darlan As 'Hitler's Tool' at Request of Stimson

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 19.—Wendell Willkie said tonight that at the request of Secretary of War Stimson he dropped a reference to Admiral Darlan as "Hitler's tool" from his Herald Tribune forum speech.

Asked about reports that the War Secretary telephoned him 45 minutes before he spoke last Monday night requesting elimination of the reference on the ground that it "might upset" Admiral Darlan and interefere with the North African campaign, Willkie said:

"The facts are substantially correct."

A 12-hour censorship on interpretive stories on the speech by British correspondents, making it impossible for the dispatches to get abroad until late Tuesday morning, was revealed by Don Iddon, chief correspondent in the United States for the London Daily Mail and associated newspapers.

Iddon said that censors advised him that they would only clear the Darlan references in Willkie's speech if Iddon interpreted Willkie's remarks as referring to the Vichy policy of the American Government as it existed before the North African invasion, instead of describing Willkie's comments as criticism of the present dealings with Admiral Darlan.

Iddon said that although he filed his story about 4:30 p. m. Monday, he was not notified of its clearance by censors until 10 a. m. Tuesday, about 12 hours after Willkie spoke.

Willkie's original text contained the paragraph:

"Shall we in America be quiet, for instance, when our leaders, after promising freedom to the French people, put in control over them the very man who has helped to enslave them? Shall we be quiet when we see our Government's long appeasement of Vichy find its logical conclusion in our collaboration with Darlan, Hitler's tool? Such collaboration outrages the spirit of free people everywhere, whatever expediency dictates it."

The only portion of this paragraph which Willkie used after his telephone conversation with Stimson was:

"Shall we be quiet when we see our State Department's long appeasement of Vichy?"

Commenting on the fact that President Roosevelt had referred to Admiral Darlan's position at his press conference Tuesday afternoon, Willkie said:

"I was happy to see that the President confirmed what I wrote, but was unable to deliver, about Darlan. The more I see of some of our censorship the less I think of it."

The President at that time said "we are opposed to French ministers who support Hitler and the Axis," he added: "The present temporary arrangement in North and West Africa is only a temporary expedient, justified solely by the stress of battle."

Willkie did not give any specific promises that he would revise his remarks but afterward decided to agree to the Secretary's request.

All-Out Attack On Kunming Is Predicted

By George Wang
United Press Staff Writer

Chungking, Nov. 19.—The Japanese have massed 30,000 men west of the Salween River in Yunnan Province for a drive eastward against Kunming, strategic city on China's air supply route from India, and other enemy troops are poised in occupied Indo-China for a concurrent push from the south, a Chinese military spokesman disclosed today.

He said that the Japanese, stalled in the narrow sector of Yunnan between the Salween River and Burma since last May, were expected to launch an all-out attack against Yunnan Province at any moment.

Japanese occupation of Kunming would "interfere" with China's vital air connections with India, he said, and might lead to an enemy drive against the Chungking region. Kunming, eastern terminus of the lost Burma Road, is 230 miles east of the Salween and 550 miles southeast of Chungking.

Large numbers of collapsible boats and other equipment were reported to have been sent by the Japanese from Burma to southwest Yunnan for an attempted crossing of the Salween gorges, and 300 Japanese planes were said to be based at Tengyueh. Wanting and other enemy airfields west of the Salween.

Concurrent with a drive from the Salween region, the spokesman said, the Japanese might attempt a pincer move northward from Indo-China, where they were reported to have increased their troop concentrations during recent weeks and started large-scale maneuvers.

Rolling Stock Taken

He said the Japanese had commandeered all rolling stock in the occupied French colony and suspended all passenger services. French authorities were reported to have been forced to surrender maps showing Chinese fortifications on the Yunnan border and to disclose military intelligence on Chinese preparedness.

A broadcast claim by the Japanese-controlled Radio Saigon yesterday that Chinese Gen. Pai Chung-Hsi had flown to Yunnan to lead an attack against Indo-China was a Japanese "fabrication and a pretext to strengthen their hold on Indo-China," the spokesman asserted.

Meanwhile, the newspaper Ta Kong Pao reported that several United States Air Force planes have reached Chengtu, Szechwan Province capital 150 miles northwest of here, from Russia, where they had been used in the defense of Moscow.

The newspaper said there was close cooperation among Chinese, British and American air forces at Chengtu.

Reds Claim Front-Wide Success

dead on the battlefield and the number of wounded was "several times larger."

The Russians said they captured 140 German tanks, 7 armored cars, 70 guns, including 37 armor-piercing guns, and 95 mortars.

The Twenty-third German Tank Division and the Second Rumanian Mountain Infantry Division also were said to have suffered severe losses.

Success All Along Line

Yesterday's noon communique said the Russians had captured several enemy fortifications south of Stalingrad, while beating off German attacks within the cold, ruined Volga city, and advanced slightly in the Tuapse region near the Black Sea coast.

Every report from the 2000-mile battlefront, much of it covered by ice, snow and thick fog, told of Russian success; nowhere were the Germans making a major effort to advance.

(The German communique suggested that the Russians had shifted from the defensive to the offensive. They claimed to have repulsed "violent new attacks" in the Nalchik area, smashing troop concentrations on the Don front, on the Volkov front south of Leningrad and even in the Arctic Rybachi Peninsula opposite Finland.

(The Germans said shock troops were fighting in Stalingrad and that Russian groups in the Tuapse area were cut off and annihilated.)

The Germans for several days now have undertaken no major drive in any sector although they have tried short, sharp punches at Stalingrad and in the Caucasus to improve their positions.

The impression here is that the death-dealing defense of Stalingrad and the Caucasus has inflicted such heavy casualties that the Germans were forced to slow down. Then too there is the urgent problem of preparing winter defense lines.

Spitfires Rout Nazi Warplanes

Allied Force Headquarters in North Africa, Nov. 19 (AP).—British Spitfires smashing at a German air force attempt to break the armored Allied tentacles reaching toward Bizerte and Tunis shot down at least five Axis warplanes today in bitter sky battles.

Although the Royal Navy is keeping pace with the Allied ground advance on the seaward side, the extending lines of communication are hampering the speed of the drive eastward.

It is against these lines that the Nazi air force struck, only to meet veteran Spitfire squadrons.

Learning their lessons at Bone when the Hurricans and Spitfires had a field day against unescorted bombers, Reichmarshal Goering's bombers returned with a fighter escort from Sardinia, but the result was the same.

While thousands of British and American soldiers watched or manned antiaircraft defenses, the wheeling and twisting Spitfires over the port sent five bombers crashing in flames. Two Spitfires were lost.

Petain Calls on North Africa to Resist 'Aggressors'

news which has no other aim but to injure and to weaken you.

"The truth however is simple. It is necessary that you submit to the discipline that I exact from each of you or you endanger your country.

"In the interest of France I have decided to accord powers to Premier Laval to permit him to fulfill a difficult task. Union is more than ever indispensable. I remain your guide. You have only one duty. Obey! You have but one government: That to which I have given the power to govern. You have but one country, which I incarnate: France."

France in Turmoil

France now is plunged into a political and military turmoil as grave as the days of collapse to Germany in 1940. Frenchmen in Africa are flocking to the Allies, and the Moroccan radio reported that General Barre, French Tunisian commander, now was fighting against the Axis in his bailiwick.

The Berlin radio disclosed last night that the Tunisian commander had tried to trap Rear Admiral Rene Platon, Vichy secretary of state for the navy, on his recent inspection trip in Tunisia. This trip was made at a time when the Axis was pouring air-borne troops into the protectorate.

The whereabouts of Gen. Maxime Weygand, former French North African commander who was dismissed by Vichy under Axis pressure, remained a mystery tonight.

Leon Morandat, prominent French trade-unionist, who has just escaped from Vichy France to join the fighting French here, said Weygand was arrested by the Gestapo during the Nazi occupation of the remainder of France. Weygand, he said, had turned down Petain's request to command a new French army.

Although Morandat said Weygand was released 24 hours later by the Germans, the Rome radio in a domestic broadcast said "it was officially confirmed that General Weygand is under arrest in Germany."

Adds Only Confusion

What effect Petain's appeal will have on the Allied cause remains to be seen, but it certainly will not add anything but confusion to the mind of the average Frenchman who has to depend on a Laval-administered press.

Morandat said 80 per cent of the French people were De Gaulle followers, and the fighting French claim to have an underground that influences at least two million of their countrymen.

It was noted here that Petain again saw fit to mention why he had conferred full political powers on the notorious Laval who is distrusted by the majority of Frenchmen. The marshal explained cryptically that his action regarding Laval was "more than ever indispensable." This was seen as a tacit admission of full Axis dominance in France despite German propaganda efforts to picture Vichy as an independent regime.

At the time the marshal was broadcasting his appeal the German-controlled Paris radio was announcing that three more trainloads of French workers were leaving for German factories.

The Paris radio said French and German authorities had agreed on a total of 75,000 to be dispatched in exchange for the release of 25,000 French war prisoners.

There are one million or more war prisoners in Germany, and this has been used by Germany for more than two years as a powerful lever in exacting as much French collaboration as possible.

Air Service Units' Heads Exchanged

Miller Going to European Theater As Frank Takes Over Command in U. S.

Assignment of Maj. Gen. Henry J. F. Miller of Miami, Fla., commanding general of the Air Service Command, to head the Air Service Command in the European theater was announced yesterday by Secretary of War Stimson.

Miller succeeds Maj. Gen. Walter H. Frank of Washington, who will take over Miller's command in this country.

"This exchange of officers," said the Secretary, "is intended to make available to the headquarters, Army Air Forces, the experience of a commander fresh from a combat zone, and to give an opportunity to another general officer to gain actual combat experience."

The Air Service Command, both in the United States and in combat zones, is responsible for operation of air depots, the repair and maintenance of planes and equipment, and a continual flow of supplies and parts to operating units.

A new infantry battalion in the Army of the United States to be made up entirely of citizens of Austria now living in this country will be organized as soon as possible, Stimson announced today.

This resulted, he told his press conference, from the appeals of many Austrian nationals for an opportunity to serve together in freeing their homeland and other nations conquered by the Axis.

"It will demonstrate to Austrians all over the world the determination of the United States to free Austria and her people from oppressive Axis control," Stimson said.

Officers of the battalion at first will be Americans of Austrian extraction, he said, but they will be replaced by Austrian nationals as rapidly as a sufficient number of enlisted men from the group can qualify for commissions at officer candidate schools.

The Army already has a battalion of Norwegian nationals, a regiment of Filipinos and a unit, formerly part of the National Guard of Hawaii, made up of men of Japanese extraction. A number of Canadians are serving with Americans in a special assault force known as the first special service force, and the Army has made citizens of friendly nations eligible for commissions in the Army of the United States.

Prevention of typhus in the Army and Navy and control of the dreaded disease among civilians in areas occupied by American forces is the job of a New Army-Navy commission, announced Stimson.

Called the United States of America Typhus Commission, the group is made up of four distinguished scientists, all noted typhus research specialists—Rear Admiral Charles S. Stephenson, Medical Corps, U. S. N.; Lieut. Col. Harry Plotz, Medical Corps, A. U. S. (Army of the United States); Senior Surgeon Adolph Rumreich, U. S. Public Health Service, and Maj. John C. Snyder, Medical Corps, A. U. S.

Stephenson will be chairman, and the commission's primary duty will be to develop information which can serve as the basis for specific recommendations for protection of the armed forces in places where they may be exposed to typhus.

Movie Loses Suit To Woman Hurt In Seat Collapse

San Francisco, Nov. 19 (AP).—Somber-robed justices of the United States Court of Appeals decided that if a 285-pound woman crashes through a theater seat, the theater is responsible.

Mrs. Jean Forsythe of Los Angeles thereby won the right yesterday to $25,000 damages from a theater there, which had appealed.

"The ticket seller saw that the woman was 285 pounds of solid flesh," read Judge William Denman's decision, "and yet he sold the ticket. The usher showed her to the seat although he, too observed her size.

The plea that Mrs. Forsythe had not shown due care by examining the seat before she sat down was brushed aside by the judge with the comment:

"Impossible, in a dimly-lighted theater."

Archduke Otto to Lead Battalion Recruit Drive

The Archduke Otto of Austria told The Post yesterday that Secretary of War Stimson's creation of a fighting Austrian battalion in the United States Army will have "a tremendous reaction among the Austrian people" in their subjugated homeland.

OTTO

Close on heels of the War Secretary's announcement, the archduke, long-time resident of America, stated that he will head a "Military Committee for the Liberation of Austria" whose chief aim will be in helping to raise the battalion.

Austrians, Archduke Otto said, are residing in many parts of the United States. He and the committee intend contacting them immediately in hope of speedy recruitment of the fighting unit.

Archduke Otto emphasized that the committee is nonpolitical in every respect, having only the purpose contained in its name.

He was convinced that word of its founding will find way into Austria and cheer the people who he believes to be solidly behind the United Nations. They are unable to make an uprising now but will, he is sure, as soon as the United Nations' invading forces come within distance for Austrians to join.

Austrians, he said, long accustomed to Axis successes, were cheered by the American movement into Africa. Now, the formation of an Austrian battalion fighting as Austrians within the United States Army will further inspire them, he asserted.

U. S. Building Guard Convicted in Abortion

Claude E. America, Government building guard, living at 2924 Yost Place Northwest, was found guilty yesterday in District Court of performing an abortion on a 20-year-old Navy Department employe. America faces a possible maximum sentence of five years in prison.

The girl testified that America "treated" her at his home after meeting her at Ninth and F Streets Northwest. The girl later required treatment at Gallinger Hospital for septic poisoning several days after the operation, it was testified.

Army's Free Battalion Plan Welcome News to Austrian-Born

(The writer of this story works in the city room of The Post and this self-interview was his reaction to the announcement of Secretary Stimson, which he had just read in the Associated Press wire copy.)

By Kurt Kelman

"The organization of a Free Austrian battalion in the United States Army, announced yesterday by Secretary Stimson, is wonderful news for us," a young Austrian told The Post yesterday.

The young fellow came to this country from Vienna more than three years ago, and now has his first citizenship papers.

"Why didn't you try to join the United States Army?" he was asked. He did try, he said, right after Pearl Harbor, but was rejected.

"But I have an account to settle over there, and I hope I'll get a chance now."

He belonged to a pacifist youth group in his native Vienna, had to find a new place to sleep every night after Hitler's Gestapo marched in. He finally escaped, jumping from a train into the safety of Switzerland.

"It's the greatest country on earth," he exclaimed, and he has no misgivings because he could not stay in Switzerland, since the little country was overcrowded with refugees. On to France, and still farther away from his family in Vienna and the college where he had studied chemistry. He was only nineteen then, but he found a world friendly though ignorant.

They helped him along wherever possible but they missed the opportunity to help themselves by listening closer to the repeated warnings he voiced. He had seen the beasts, he knew their ways, their intentions. The French gave him a meal and wanted to hear him tell stories about waltzes and the Vienna of the Blue Danube. The Vienna of the Brown Flood was considered an awkward dinner conversation.

Now, finally, his hour has struck. Now, he hopes, he prays, he will be able to contribute his fighting acumen and his experience. He considers the participation in the Austrian battalion as a special service to America, rather than a lack of loyalty to her. Americans today, realize that the time of isolation is over. The satisfactory settlement of affairs over there, the young man continued is of paramount importance for America's own future security and prosperity.

Chemists, for instance, serve in their capacity; Americans of Austrian origin should do what all others do, but they should have and will now have a chance to contribute their special knowledge.

"The recognition of the Austrian nation as a fighting ally will strengthen the opposition within the country," he said. "In one of the provinces eight men were executed by the Gestapo last week, papers here reported, and now that th Austrian people know that they are not bound to Hitler's fate but recognized as an independent nation, sabotage will grow and another country will be added to the soft belly of the Nazi fortress which our troops are preparing to storm."

Franco Reaffirms Pledge of Neutrality

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

Against a background of partial mobilization and reports that Hitler is demanding Iberian naval and air bases, Spain yesterday gave the United States renewed assurances of its intention of maintaining absolute neutrality.

The assurances were delivered by the ambassador of Generalissimo Francisco Franco, Spanish Chief of State, Don Juan Francisco de Cardenas, during a conference with Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull described Cardenas' call a few moments after the ambassador left the State Department as intended to reiterate the attitude of his government in the continued maintenance of absolute neutrality.

"Were these assurances given at the inquiry of this Government?" Hull was asked.

They were not, he replied, adding that the Spanish Ambassador came to the State Department at the unilateral decision of the Spanish government.

With American expeditionary forces consolidating their position in French North Africa, continued neutrality of Spain and Spanish Morocco has become increasingly important. A British news service yesterday was carrying reports from Ankara quoting Turkish sources as authority for the assertion that Franco has refused an urgent Nazi request for naval and air bases in Spain—bases from which Hitler might be able to stem the rising flood of Allied victory in French and Italian Africa.

Additionally, radio Berlin has been trumpeting reports that Franco has ordered a partial mobilization of Spanish military power, with the implication that the massing of troops is directed against the United Nations. The State Department call of Ambassador De Cardenas apparently was designed to allay such assertions.

While the State Department was accepting the assurances of the Spanish Ambassador, Secretary Hull was again castigating Pierre Laval, new "dictator" of France, as a complete Nazi puppet, and refusing to engage in controversy over American use of Admiral Jean Francois Darlan as a "tool of expedience" in French North Africa.

Appointment of Laval by Marshal Philipe Petain as French dictator, Hull said, only confirms what the State Department and Hull himself have said many times during the past two years—that Laval is a part and parcel of Hitlerism and the Hitler government.

As for engaging in controversy about the role of Darlan in North Africa, Hull said all debate should now be subordinate to military action until the expeditionary forces under Lieut. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower nail down the advantages they have gained in Algeria and French Morocco.

A terrific struggle is being waged over power in North Africa just now, the white haired Secretary said, and it would be unwise for him to be drawn into controversy until the United States succeeds in North Africa and nails down its advantages. Meanwhile, he concluded, the American Government and the State Department stand one thousand per cent on what has been done and on what will be done during progress of military operations on Hitler's North African flank.

War Sidelights

Italy Loses 66 Divisions on 3 War Fronts

London, Nov. 19 (AP).—Sixty-six Italian divisions, comprising about 594,000 men, have been destroyed in Africa and Albania since Mussolini entered the war, a military commentator said today.

He explained that a division, which in the Italian army averages about 9000 men, is considered destroyed in a military sense when it is so severely mauled it must be regrouped or reformed.

Some of Italy's 39 white and 27 native African divisions listed as destroyed were wiped out completely, however.

The commentator grouped Italy's losses as follows:

Albanian campaign—11 metropolitan divisions.

East African campaign—12 metropolitan and 25 native African divisions.

North African campaigns—16 metropolitan and 2 native African divisions.

Italian losses in Russia were not calculated, but it is known that 10 Italian divisions are operating there.

Japs Expect Repetition

London, Nov. 19 (AP).—German broadcasts heard here today quoted Admiral Sankichi Takahashi, former commander in chief of the Japanese navy, as saying "we must reckon with further heavy fighting in the Solomons."

The broadcast added that he declared "the Americans obviously are planning to use the Solomons as a springboard for an offensive with a view to regaining islands in the Dutch East Indies."

This radio report, based on a D. N. B. news agency dispatch, conflicts with repeated declarations by the Tokyo radio that heavy losses in Pacific naval battles have reduced the American fleet to impotence for offensive purposes.

Jap Airdromes Battered

New Delhi, India, Nov. 19 (INS).—R. A. F. Wellington bombers last night attacked a Japanese airdrome at Meiktila, over the Burma border, British General Headquarters in India announced today.

Many bombs burst on the runway, it was said, and large fires were started.

ARE WE GOING TO HAVE ENOUGH FOOD?

In The Midst Of Plenty, Americans Must Adjust Food Buying To Wartime Conditions. Here's The Truth About The Food Situation — Facts Every Homemaker Should Know To Make The Most Of Our Supply!

BLESSED with good weather, America's farming families have labored long and well to bring forth a mighty harvest—by every standard the greatest in our country's history. For this we can give humble thanks. From the standpoint of our total food supply, no one need go hungry. But even with this unprecedented bounty of grain, fruit, vegetables, live stock and dairy products, we have been jarred to learn that our "plenty" is hardly enough. Here are the facts about the food situation.

Increased Demand—The demand is tremendous—so tremendous that even the amazing productivity of American farmers cannot meet it. Not only must we keep our own soldiers and sailors the best-fed fighting men on earth, but we must act as the larder as well as the arsenal of our many brave allies. This, plus the fact that Americans now have more money than ever before to spend for food, makes the demand exceed even our present record supply.

Shortages in Farm Labor—Industry and the armed forces are drawing increasingly large numbers of workers from farms. The farm labor shortage is very real. Even now the services of women, children and old people are required to get crops grown and harvested.

Shortages in Farm Machinery—Under the pressure of arms production, farm-machinery manufacture is cut to one-fifth of the 1940 volume—at a time when the need for farm machinery is greater than ever before.

Shortages in Transportation—Farm products are bulky, heavy—as are the goods farmers buy for production. That means heavy demands on rubber and rail transport, now seriously curtailed. Warning for the future is that bulky items without much food value probably will not be shipped at all.

HOW TO MEET THIS EMERGENCY

Only a third of America's families have a diet that can be classified as good—yet today we have a greater obligation than ever to keep strong, healthy and well-fed. You can serve wholesome, delicious, nourishing meals and still observe the five wartime rules listed in the last column. Follow them carefully. Do your share to help solve America's food problem!

Share the Meat—To provide Army, Navy and Lend-Lease needs, and insure a fair share of meat for all civilians, the government is asking that we voluntarily hold our weekly meat purchases to 2½ pounds per person over 12 years of age. This amount of meat would be considered a luxury by Europeans. Nevertheless it calls for greater consumption of other protein foods such as milk, beans, cheese, poultry, eggs, peanuts; greater use of cheaper cuts, leftover meats, gravy and drippings; spreading the meat flavor by mixing it with other foods.

Observe New Price Ceilings—Government has authorized price increases of a penny or two on certain foodstuffs—canned vegetables, cereals, coffee, shortening, cooking and salad oils, sugar, etc. You can help keep down the cost of living by cooperating with your grocer to help make price control work.

Shop Wisely—Buy "Victory Food Specials"!—To release for overseas more canned or dried foods, government and industry are promoting Victory Food Specials—perishable foods that are in season and plentiful. Watch for these "Specials" on display at your grocers. When you buy them you help save tin and shipping and release more foods for our fighting men!

Send Your Tin Cans to War—Tin is essential to plane production . . . yet practically the world's entire source of supply is in enemy hands! If you live in an area where tin cans are being collected, follow these simple rules and help relieve this shortage. 1. Wash cans thoroughly—removing label. 2. Cut off top and bottom. 3. Step on can to flatten (do not hammer it) and leave space between inner walls. 4. Tuck top and bottom inside can. 5. Save prepared cans in a basket or box until collection day is announced in your newspapers. All food tins are wanted, but do not save paint, varnish, oil or grease cans.

Help Cut Down Deliveries—Unless present delivery equipment is carefully maintained, the bread on the family dinner table and milk for baby's bottle are definitely hazarded. For your protection, government has ordered stores to eliminate special deliveries, call-backs and multiple trips to the same sections—and further reduce delivery mileage by 25%. Don't blame your grocer for delays. He's doing the best he can. Help out by planning your orders. Carry all you can or buy ahead for the whole week!

Buy What Is Produced Locally—If there's locally caught fish on the market where you live, buy it and eat it regularly. Do the same with perishable fruits and vegetables grown in neighboring districts. By taking up the surplus in your own community you relieve the transportation shortage and prevent waste of items that may soon be scarce.

Coffee . . . Don't Waste It—Coffee will be rationed beginning Nov. 29th, but don't "take it out" on your grocer. Remember . . . ships are carrying more precious cargoes nowadays! Actually, there's still enough coffee for our armed forces, civilians, institutions. But there's none to waste! Make only what you're sure to drink . . . and use the sugar sparingly.

Fats and Grease for The Firing Line—Fats and grease make glycerine . . . glycerine makes explosives . . . explosives are essential to victory! Your job is to: 1. Save pan and broiler drippings, deep fats—all waste cooking fats. 2. Pour and strain them into a clean, wide-mouthed can. 3. Keep in a refrigerator or cool, dark place to prevent them from becoming rancid. 4. Sell them to your meat dealer in quantities of one pound or more at the current price per pound. He will start them on their way to war industries . . . and the guns, tanks and planes of our men at the front!

Follow These 5 Commandments—As a patriotic American, and as a wise and thrifty homemaker, you are already taking many of these important steps to keep your family healthy and well-fed. Be guided by these five commandments of wartime menu planning:

1. Buy what is plentiful.
2. Buy what is fresh.
3. Buy what is produced locally.
4. Buy what the government asks you to buy through its Victory Food Program.
5. Don't hoard or waste food.

Now, as always, the House of Heinz is extending every effort to provide you with the most delicious, highest-quality foods that can be produced. Yet because of the tin shortage and the vast quantities of food needed for our fighting forces, you may have difficulty getting some of your old favorites.

When your grocer does have sufficient supplies of the 57 Varieties, however, don't buy more than you need. For your neighbor, too, wants to share the old-time goodness and flavor of these famous keystone-labeled foods.

There is still plenty of those spicy Heinz Condiments and Pickles to brighten meatless meals and thrift dishes. Soon also, your grocer will have six new Condensed Soups that taste just as good as the pre-war ready-to-serve kind.

Heinz Research Department is still forging ahead with experiments on new products and packaging methods so that you will be able to continue enjoying Heinz home-tasting foods, despite wartime demands and restrictions.

Washington's Little Ronnie Cunningham Is the Beautiful Lolo LaTouche

By N. E. F. Meekins
Post Staff Writer

When Ronnie Cunningham was born in Garfield Hospital, she could not, of course, visualize that 21 years later her artistry as a danseuse would be loudly applauded here in Washington on the stage of historic National Theater.

Miss Cunningham, who portrays Lolo LaTouche in "The Merry Widow," picturesque revival of Franz Lehar's operetta, was educated at St. Gabriel's School and Immaculate Conception School for Girls. When she was only 4 years old, her mother, Mrs. A. J. Cunningham, saw that her daughter had the makings of a great dancer. Ronnie, at that time, couldn't see it. She resented her mother's insistence on taking her to dancing school. And as the years passed, with Ronnie still taking dancing lessons, the little Irish, pink-cheeked girl tried her best to play "hookey" from classes so she would not miss the next exciting serial of "Tarzan" at the neighborhood movie. But her mother saw to it that Ronnie didn't see the serial and went to her dance class.

When Ronnie was 15 she went to New York with her mother and a year later appeared in "I Married an Angel." She was a ballet dancer. She was next seen at the famous Radio City Music Hall in New York as a Rockette and was cast in "Higher and Higher," "Banjo Eyes" as a specialty dancer, and in "Panama Hattie."

Ronnie was popularly known here as a radio artist in "Reed-io Kids," a program heard over Station WOL when she was a mere child. Now her greatest ambition is to combine her talents of acting, dancing and singing in a legitimate play.

And her friends think theater audiences will hear much more about Ronnie Cunningham in the future!

Descendant of Bedford Forrest Is Made Army Air Forces General

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Blood will tell, they say, and a descendant of one of America's greatest military commanders is proving the old adage.

His name is Nathan Bedford Forrest and he has just won the star of a brigadier general in the United States Army—becoming one of the youngest, if not the youngest, general in the Army.

His ancestor? Why old General Nathan Bedford Forrest, the famous Confederate cavalry leader, who said that victory in war depended on "gittin' thar fustest with the mostest men."

OLD GENERAL FORREST

Young General Forrest is an airman, and a good one. Although holding the permanent rank of captain, he has won four temporary promotions in the past 22 months. Since last January, he has been advanced three grades.

A West Pointer, class of 1928, Forrest started out to be a cavalryman, like his famed great-granddaddy. Shortly after being graduated from the military academy, however, he applied and was accepted for flight training at Brooks Field, Tex.

Since winning his wings in 1929, young "Nate" Forrest has specialized in attack aviation—a specialty of his forebear on horseback. Rated as a top-notch pilot, he is now chief of staff of the Second Air Force at Fort George Wright, Wash.

Unlike old Nate, the modern General Forrest is cultured and very well read, Air Force officers say. The Civil War leader, while something of a military genius, had virtually no formal education.

Ancestry Traced

Slight, wiry and bow-legged, young Nate was a star boxer at West Point. Classmates recall that he was a "sleepy sort of a guy, but always knew what was going on."

YOUNG GENERAL FORREST

When President Roosevelt appointed Forrest a brigadier general a short time ago, officers at the War Department didn't know whether or not he was related to the oft-quoted Confederate leader. He never talked about his ancestor. The Tennessee State Librarian and Archivist at Memphis, where Forrest was born, however, checked up, and has definitely established that he is indeed the old general's great grandson.

Air Force officers here who know him say that young General Forrest is not one to coin military doctrines like the old cavalryman. If he did express his theory for success in war today, however, they say, it would be something like:

"Get there first with the most airplanes."

The WASHINGTON Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

Sidetracked Planes Went to North Africa

WHEN WENDELL WILLKIE conferred with Stalin in Moscow, the Russian leader was critical of the British for sidetracking American lend-lease goods in Scotland and substituting for them inferior British war supplies.

DREW PEARSON

The inside story of this can now be told—a story which Stalin apparently did not know when he talked to Willkie.

Last summer, a shipment of Airacobras was en route to Russia from the United States and the convoy stopped to refuel in the British Isles. At that time, General Eisenhower, preparing for the second front in Africa, asked that these fast fighting planes be given to him instead of being sent on to Russia.

General Eisenhower was so insistent that he finally went to Prime Minister Churchill personally, who finally agreed that the Airacobras be sidetracked for use on the forthcoming African front.

That was why Stalin never got them.

Major Roosevelt Proves Heroic Commander

THIS COLUMN threw plenty of harpoons into Jimmy Roosevelt in the old Boston insurance days, so now it takes pleasure in evening up the score. The real story of what Major Roosevelt has been doing in the Marine Corps is gradually leaking out through his comrades. It would have been on the front pages if he were not the President's son.

MAJOR ROOSEVELT

Jimmy is a member of the Raiders, equivalent to the British commandos, the most dangerous branch of the Marine Corps. As such he landed on Makin Island in the mid-Pacific, to wipe out a Jap base.

Going ashore from a submarine in a rubber boat, Roosevelt's party upset seven times on an outer reef before they finally reached the island. Then the Raiders wiped out the Jap garrison, ranged through the island for two days until every Jap was exterminated. During the raid, the Japs sent in two big troop transport planes to retake the island. Roosevelt's men were armed only with light caliber machine guns. But they waited until each plane was close to the ground, then opened up full force and wiped out each plane.

Five of Roosevelt's men were killed, and about 130 Japs. When the job was done, Roosevelt took his men out on rubber boats, finally found their submarines.

Men who have served with Jimmy pay him great tribute, say he has the courage of a real leader, inspires confidence. No one seeing him unshaven for days, looking gaunt and hungry on the battle front would ever recognize him as the son of the President.

General Eisenhower's Joke

GEN. DWIGHT EISENHOWER, leader of the African expedition, has a rich sense of humor as well as the qualities of military leadership. Here is a story he tells on himself.

While in Washington some time ago, a newly commissioned cellophane captain had asked to have a telephone installed, and when it was late, he hit the ceiling. Calling the staff sergeant on another phone, the captain proceeded to give him the bawling out of his life.

Finally a voice at the other end said: "Do you know who you're talking to?"

There was a pause. Finally the captain replied: "Who?"

"This is General Eisenhower."

Another pause.

"General, do you know who you are talking to?" asked the captain.

"No."

"Thank God for that!" said the captain, who apparently remembered the gag from "Panama Hattie."

Overruling Roosevelt

MORE AND MORE it looks as if Ferdinand Eberstadt, the Wall Street broker, is becoming the most powerful man in the War Production Board and one of the most powerful in the Government. It hasn't leaked out yet, but recently he managed to overrule the Vice President of the United States, the Undersecretary of State, and Lend-Lease Administrator Ed Stettinius.

Some time ago, Eberstadt appointed as chief of WPB Export Priorities, Maj. Tom Armstrong, of Standard Oil of New Jersey, who had operated in various Latin American countries. Armstrong had been vigorous in bucking the development of Latin American government-owned oil companies, and the Latin Americans don't like him. Therefore, they squawked when they heard he would now sit in the all-important priorities position where he could decide whether they could, or could not, receive oil equipment to develop their government-owned industries in competition with Standard and private companies.

Undersecretary of State Welles agreed with the Latin Americans, and protested to the President. So did Vice President Wallace of the BEW, and also Stettinius, who buys lend-lease oil equipment for Latin American governments.

As a result of these protests, Roosevelt ordered Donald Nelson to dismiss Major Armstrong. However, Eberstadt in effect has overruled the President. He insisted that Armstrong remain. And he is still on the job.

Military Diplomacy

GEN. DWIGHT EISENHOWER has a lot of tough jobs in Africa, and one of them, which doesn't get into the headlines, is to be the diplomatic negotiator among high French officials.

Among other things, he has been very adroit in handling General Giraud, who escaped from France dressed as an old woman and who now is in command of French forces in North Africa.

GEN. EISENHOWER

Actually, General Giraud expected to be commander of all forces in North Africa, both French and American. He is one of the highest generals in the French army, and before France fell, would have replaced General Gamelin as Chief of Staff had he not been taken prisoner. Therefore, since he outranks Eisenhower and has had much more varied experience, it is not unnatural that Giraud should aspire to be commander in chief of the entire North African operation, including the United States Army.

Eisenhower, however, has a charming personality, a broad grin, a smattering of French, and had little trouble in handling General Giraud.

Another complication was the fact that Giraud hates Admiral Darlan. Yet Darlan, as a member of the cabinet, outranks him. In addition, there is General Nogues, another top-ranking office. So it has been worked out that Nogues commands the French civil population, Giraud the French army, and Darlan the French fleet.

'Czar' Is Named To Double U.S. Plane Output

been cut to enable the production of heavier types.

Factors That Make It Possible

The following factors will make the increase possible, Nelson said:

1. The new coordinated plane program which Wilson will develop, preventing waste through duplication of effort and inefficiency.

2. Increased production of parts by making full use of all existing facilities and by giving more jobs to small business.

3. Building of new facilities if existing facilities prove inadequate.

4. By simplifying and standardizing of plane production.

Nelson expressed the opinion that that the doubled program would not require a doubling of the present airplane production force or adoubling of existing facilities.

Army, Navy Represented

Wilson, who recently resigned as president of General Electric Co. to take his post with WPB will act as chairman of an aircraft production board.

Already named to the board, in addition to Wilson, are Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Echols of the Army Air Force and Rear Admiral Ralph E. Davion, assistant chief of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, Nelson said. Others may be added.

One effect of the move will be to lay the basis for greater working cooperation between the Army and the Navy, Nelson said.

Nelson emphasized that he was directing the increase in airplane production without allowing quality to be sacrificed.

"We must always attempt to build a better plane than the enemy," he said. "Our experiences in combat show the importance of that. It would be simple to double production without improving the planes."

He explained that planes must constantly be designed and redesigned as combat experience reveals their defects.

Considerable emphasis will be placed on the standardization of specific parts to increase production, although standardization of designs will be avoided to leave room for improvements, Nelson said.

"Parts production must be stepped up to meet the goals," Nelson added. "Parts must be stepped up to allow for repair demands. We will have to make greater use of small plants.

"Larger plants which have been making simple things will have to stop making simple things and turn to more intricate things, leaving the simpler things for the smaller plants."

Asked to describe the effect of the North African campaign on production plans, Nelson said: "As we get on the offensive, our problems become direct."

"The North African campaign will definitely change our production schedules and designs. On the defensive, we were shooting with a shot gun; on the offensive, we are shooting with a rifle."

He expressed the opinion that the increased production demands of our offensive operations could be supplied without sacrificing aid to our Allies. He continued:

"We consider our obligations under lend-lease as part of our production schedules. We will just have to produce more."

Under the new set-up, the armed services will continue to handle plane procurement, but under the supervision of Wilson's board, Nelson said.

"It pins the responsibility definitely on Wilson," he added.

Employes of the present WPB aircraft division will be assigned to work under the armed services, he said.

the Senators present.

"I won't agree that a Senator has to surrender his rights to cloture in order to get a bill up," cried Chandler to the amazement of his colleague, Senator Barkley, who faced certain defeat, had made public acknowledgment of it and was anxious to end the filibuster.

"I realize that prolongnation of the filibuster is not conducive to the high esteem in which the public should hold the Senate of the United States," Barkley told the Senate before Chandler's surprise move. "It is a regrettable fact for which the Senate itself is responsible, and has been for 150 years, that all of the rules of the Senate, work into the hands of those who seek to obstruct legislation."

After a series of cloakroom conferences, attended largely by Southern Senators bitterly opposed to the measure which would remove the poll tax as a qualification for voting in Federal elections in eight Southern States, Connally came onto the floor with his "proposition" in "vindication of the course we have pursued up to this time."

Protested by Barkley

At first he stipulated that the cloture vote should come tomorrow. Barkley protested that enough time was not being allowed for absent Senators to return to the Capital. He made a counter proposal—vote on cloture at 1 p. m. Tuesday.

Connally compromised on Monday, after asking: "Do not the absentee members who are at home playing golf or walking around among their cattle, owe us any duty to be here?"

Barkley agreed to what Connally called "our final proposal" in all its phases, but Chandler's objection killed it.

Vainly Senator Barkley protested that he did not have to have unanimous consent, under the rules, to file a petition for cloture, that he would stand by his agreement to shelve the bill until this Congress expires January 3. He turned to Chandler and Connally as though pleading with them to restore the situation for him.

Regular Order Demanded

Senator McKellar, still stung by the "humiliation" of his arrest last Saturday, demanded the "regular order," which was the signal for Senator Bilbo (Democrat) of Mississippi, to resume his dissertation on the white and Negro races and his plea for States rights.

Bilbo who had surrendered the floor to Connally, began: "Now when I was so unnecessarily interrupted."

Disclosure by C. I. O. President Philip Murray, that he and other labor leaders "decried" the "reprehensible conduct" of "certain" Senators at a conference yesterday with President Roosevelt gave rise to speculation that the Administration may have intervened to block "surrender" of the bill's proponents.

Graham asked at least 50 business leaders who believe they have already done a creditable job for the War Fund to volunteer their services beginning this morning, reporting to Lanier McLachlen, president of the Board of Trade, for assignments to call on other business executives and help them make a fresh start.

This morning, meeting at 9:30 a. m. in the board room of the Hamilton National Bank Building, 40 prominent businessmen responded to an invitation issued by Floyd D. Akers, campaign chairman, to plan for putting new life and new enthusiasm into War Fund response by business and commercial elements.

At a meeting of the Advance Gifts Unit called by Richard H. Wilmer, chairman, for today at 12:30 p. m. in the Jefferson Room of the Mayflower Hotel, the 250 volunteer unit workers will be asked to go out between now and Tuesday with the objective of obtaining $100 each in additional gifts, or a total of $25,000.

(The Agriculture Department announced in Washington that it was halting all distribution of frozen eggs through its regional offices and State welfare associations pending investigatio nof the Salem tragedy.)

(The egges were originally processed for lend-lease shipment which heightened Government interest in the investigation, the United Press reported. Investigators from the Army, the American Medical Association, the Federal Food and Drug Administration and the Surplus Commodity Administration were arriving to take part in the probe.)

The dinner was served in five separate wards last night to 460 of the hospital's 3000 inmates.

The poison struck swiftly. Within 15 minutes after the meal the victims began complaining of violent cramps. The first death occurred within an hour, and by 10 p. m., 10 had died. By midnight the toll reached 32.

More than 400 other men and women inmates are ill, but Dr. J. C. Evans, superintendent, said he expected them to recover.

Dr. Menne said he could not determine whether the poison originated in the frozen egg yokes from which the meal was prepared. He emphasized, however, that the yolks are most strongly suspected.

Gov. Charles A. Sprague, at a special meeting of the Board of Control today, said he had ordered all State institutions to stop serving any of the frozen eggs.

Dr. Evans told the board that he was much worried that if some patient had poisoned the food, there might be future attempts at poisoning.

"On the other hand, since many such eggs are shipped to the Army, there is the possibility that some saboteur poisoned a can," he said.

"Two employes who tasted the eggs said they tasted salty, and that tends to confirm the theory that poison was placed in the food. But another employe said they tasted soapy, so I don't know what to think.

"The theory of bacterial poisoning caused by spoilage or chemical reactions within the eggs, also cannot be discounted."

Borrowing of 9 Billions By Treasury to Set New Mark

Treasury Secretary Morgenthau last night announced that to meet the rising costs of war, the United States Treasury would borrow approximately nine billion dollars during December.

The total, to be sought from all possible sources, represents the largest single borrowing in the history of the world—surpassing even the huge Liberty Loan floated in September, 1918, which raised more than $6,000,000,000.

Although announced for December, the borrowing actually covers a three-month financing period—from November through January, inclusive—Morgenthau said, adding that the Treasury plans to finance the war on a bimonthly plan after the latter month.

"After completion of this borrowing, the Treasury does not expect to do major financing until after February," the Secretary said. "For its new money needs in January, the Treasury will rely upon further sales of tax savings notes, savings bonds and Treasury bills."

The nine billion dollars will be raised "partly through the continuing sales of savings bonds and tax savings notes, and partly through offerings of a number of new Treasury issues designed for every class and type of investor," the Secretary said.

Morgenthau said that the victory fund committees—manned by 44,000 volunteer workers across the country—will launch an intensive campaign November 30 to sell three series of offerings of new securities.

At the same time, he said, the war savings staff with its estimated 300,000 volunteers will seek to add "at least 7,000,000 more income-earners" to the ranks of those already investing regularly in war savings bonds through the payroll savings plan.

Along with about $2,500,000,000 in regular Treasury revenue to be expected during December, the borrowing will bring in approximately $11,500,000,000 for the month.

A West Pointer, class of 1928, Forrest started out to be a cavalryman, like his famed great-granddaddy. Shortly after being graduated from the military academy, however, he applied and was accepted for flight training at Brooks Field, Tex.

Since winning his wings in 1929, young "Nate" Forrest has specialized in attack aviation—a specialty of his forebear on horseback. Rated as a top-notch pilot, he is now chief of staff of the Second Air Force at Fort George Wright, Wash.

Unlike old Nate, the modern General Forrest is cultured and very well read, Air Force officers say. The Civil War leader, while something of a military genius, had virtually no formal education.

Ancestry Traced

Slight, wiry and bow-legged, young Nate was a star boxer at West Point. Classmates recall that he was a "sleepy sort of a guy, but always knew what was going on."

YOUNG GENERAL FORREST

When President Roosevelt appointed Forrest a brigadier general a short time ago, officers at the War Department didn't know whether or not he was related to the oft-quoted Confederate leader. He never talked about his ancestor. The Tennessee State Librarian and Archivist at Memphis, where Forrest was born, however, checked up, and has definitely established that he is indeed the old general's great grandson.

Air Force officers here who know him say that young General Forrest is not one to coin military doctrines like the old cavalryman. If he did express his theory for success in war today, however, they say, it would be something like:

"Get there first with the most airplanes."

The WASHINGTON Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

Sidetracked Planes Went to North Africa

WHEN WENDELL WILLKIE conferred with Stalin in Moscow, the Russian leader was critical of the British for sidetracking American lend-lease goods in Scotland and substituting for them inferior British war supplies.

DREW PEARSON

The inside story of this can now be told—a story which Stalin apparently did not know when he talked to Willkie.

Last summer, a shipment of Airacobras was en route to Russia from the United States and the convoy stopped to refuel in the British Isles. At that time, General Eisenhower, preparing for the second front in Africa, asked that these fast fighting planes be given to him instead of being sent on to Russia.

General Eisenhower was so insistent that he finally went to Prime Minister Churchill personally, who finally agreed that the Airacobras be sidetracked for use on the forthcoming African front.

That was why Stalin never got them.

Major Roosevelt Proves Heroic Commander

THIS COLUMN threw plenty of harpoons into Jimmy Roosevelt in the old Boston insurance days, so now it takes pleasure in evening up the score. The real story of what Major Roosevelt has been doing in the Marine Corps is gradually leaking out through his comrades. It would have been on the front pages if he were not the President's son.

MAJOR ROOSEVELT

Jimmy is a member of the Raiders, equivalent to the British commandos, the most dangerous branch of the Marine Corps. As such he landed on Makin Island in the mid-Pacific, to wipe out a Jap base.

Going ashore from a submarine in a rubber boat, Roosevelt's party upset seven times on an outer reef before they finally reached the island. Then the Raiders wiped out the Jap garrison, ranged through the island for two days until every Jap was exterminated. During the raid, the Japs sent in two big troop transport planes to retake the island. Roosevelt's men were armed only with light caliber machine guns. But they waited until each plane was close to the ground, then opened up full force and wiped out each plane.

Five of Roosevelt's men were killed, and about 130 Japs. When the job was done, Roosevelt took his men out on rubber boats, finally found their submarines.

Men who have served with Jimmy pay him great tribute, say he has the courage of a real leader, inspires confidence. No one seeing him unshaven for days, looking gaunt and hungry on the battle front would ever recognize him as the son of the President.

General Eisenhower's Joke

GEN. DWIGHT EISENHOWER, leader of the African expedition, has a rich sense of humor as well as the qualities of military leadership. Here is a story he tells on himself.

While in Washington some time ago, a newly commissioned cellophane captain had asked to have a telephone installed, and when it was late, he hit the ceiling. Calling the staff sergeant on another phone, the captain proceeded to give him the bawling out of his life.

Finally a voice at the other end said: "Do you know who you're talking to?"

There was a pause. Finally the captain replied: "Who?"

"This is General Eisenhower."

Another pause.

"General, do you know who you are talking to?" asked the captain.

"No."

"Thank God for that!" said the captain, who apparently remembered the gag from "Panama Hattie."

Overruling Roosevelt

MORE AND MORE it looks as if Ferdinand Eberstadt, the Wall Street broker, is becoming the most powerful man in the War Production Board and one of the most powerful in the Government. It hasn't leaked out yet, but recently he managed to overrule the Vice President of the United States, the Undersecretary of State, and Lend-Lease Administrator Ed Stettinius.

Some time ago, Eberstadt appointed as chief of WPB Export Priorities, Maj. Tom Armstrong, of Standard Oil of New Jersey, who had operated in various Latin American countries. Armstrong had been vigorous in bucking the development of Latin American government-owned oil companies, and the Latin Americans don't like him. Therefore, they squawked when they heard he would now sit in the all-important priorities position where he could decide whether they could, or could not, receive oil equipment to develop their government-owned industries in competition with Standard and private companies.

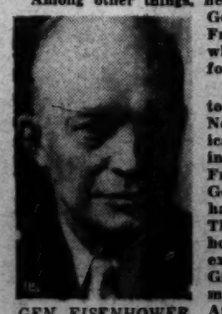
Undersecretary of State Welles agreed with the Latin Americans, and protested to the President. So did Vice President Wallace of the BEW, and also Stettinius, who buys lend-lease oil equipment for Latin American governments.

As a result of these protests, Roosevelt ordered Donald Nelson to dismiss Major Armstrong. However, Eberstadt in effect has overruled the President. He insisted that Armstrong remain. And he is still on the job.

Military Diplomacy

GEN. DWIGHT EISENHOWER has a lot of tough jobs in Africa, and one of them, which doesn't get into the headlines, is to be the diplomatic negotiator among high French officials.

Among other things, he has been very adroit in handling General Giraud, who escaped from France dressed as an old woman and who now is in command of French forces in North Africa.



GEN. EISENHOWER

Actually, General Giraud expected to be commander of all forces in North Africa, both French and American. He is one of the highest generals in the French army, and before France fell, would have replaced General Gamelin as Chief of Staff had he not been taken prisoner. Therefore, since he outranks Eisenhower and has had much more varied experience, it is not unnatural that Giraud should aspire to be commander in chief of the entire North African operation, including the United States Army.

Eisenhower, however, has a charming personality, a broad grin, a smattering of French, and had little trouble in handling General Giraud.

Another complication was the fact that Giraud hates Admiral Darlan. Yet Darlan, as a member of the cabinet, outranks him. In addition, there is General Nogues, another top-ranking office. So it has been worked out that Nogues commands the French civil population, Giraud the French army, and Darlan the French fleet.

'Czar' Is Named To Double U.S. Plane Output

...ces cut to enable the production ...f heavier types.

Factors That Make It Possible

The following factors will make the increase possible, Nelson said:

1. The new coordinated plane program which Wilson will develop, preventing waste through duplication of effort and inefficiency.

2. Increased production of parts by making full use of all existing facilities and by giving more jobs to small business.

3. Building of new facilities if existing facilities prove inadequate.

4. By simplifying and standardizing of plane production.

Nelson expressed the opinion that that the doubled program would not require a doubling of the present airplane production force or a doubling of existing facilities.

Army, Navy Represented

Wilson, who recently resigned as president of General Electric Co. to take his post with WPB will act as chairman of an aircraft production board.

Already named to the board, in addition to Wilson, are Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Echols of the Army Air Force and Rear Admiral Ralph E. Davion, assistant chief of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, Nelson said. Others may be added.

One effect of the move will be to lay the basis for greater working cooperation between the Army and the Navy, Nelson said.

Nelson emphasized that he was directing the increase in airplane production without allowing quality to be sacrificed.

"We must always attempt to build a better plane than the enemy," he said. "Our experiences in combat show the importance of that. It would be simple to double production without improving the planes."

He explained that planes must constantly be designed and redesigned as combat experience reveals their defects.

Considerable emphasis will be placed on the standardization of specific parts to increase production, although standardization of designs will be avoided to leave room for improvements, Nelson said.

"Parts production must be stepped up to meet the goals," Nelson added. "Parts must be stepped up to allow for repair demands. We will have to make greater use of small plants.

"Larger plants which have been making simple things will have to stop making simple things and turn to more intricate things, leaving the simpler things for the smaller plants."

Asked to describe the effect of the North African campaign on production plans, Nelson said: "As we get on the offensive, our problems become direct."

"The North African campaign will definitely change our production schedules and designs. On the defensive, we were shooting with a shot gun; on the offensive, we are shooting with a rifle."

He expressed the opinion that the increased production demands of our offensive operations could be supplied without sacrificing aid to our Allies. He continued:

"We consider our obligations under lend-lease as part of our production schedules. We will just have to produce more."

Under the new set-up, the armed services will continue to handle plane procurement, but under the supervision of Wilson's board, Nelson said.

"It pins the responsibility definitely on Wilson," he added.

Employes of the present WPB aircraft division will be assigned to work under the armed services, he said.

Filibuster Armistice Is Delayed

the Senators present.

"I won't agree that a Senator has to surrender his rights to cloture in order to get a bill up," cried Chandler to the amazement of his colleague, Senator Barkley, who faced certain defeat, had made public acknowledgment of it and was anxious to end the filibuster.

"I realize that prolongation of the filibuster is not conducive to the high esteem in which the public should hold the Senate of the United States," Barkley told the Senate before Chandler's surprise move. "It is a regrettable fact for which the Senate itself is responsible, and has been for 150 years, that all of the rules of the Senate, work into the hands of those who seek to obstruct legislation."

After a series of cloakroom conferences, attended largely by Southern Senators bitterly opposed to the measure which would remove the poll tax as a qualification for voting in Federal elections in eight Southern States, Connally came onto the floor with his "proposition" in "vindication of the course we have pursued up to this time."

Protested by Barkley

At first he stipulated that the cloture vote should come tomorrow. Barkley protested that enough time was not being allowed for absent Senators to return to the Capital. He made a counter proposal—vote on cloture at 1 p. m. Tuesday.

Connally compromised on Monday, after asking: "Do not the absentee members who are at home playing golf or walking around among their cattle, owe us any duty to be here?"

Barkley agreed to what Connally called "our final proposal" in all its phases, but Chandler's objection killed it.

Vainly Senator Barkley protested that he did not have to have unanimous consent, under the rules, to file a petition for cloture, that he would stand by his agreement to shelve the bill until this Congress expires January 3. He turned to Chandler and Connally as though pleading with them to restore the situation for him.

Regular Order Demanded

Senator McKellar, still stung by the "humiliation" of his arrest last Saturday, demanded the "regular order," which was the signal for Senator Bilbo (Democrat) of Mississippi, to resume his dissertation on the white and Negro races and his plea for States rights.

Bilbo who had surrendered the floor to Connally, began: "Now when I was so unnecessarily interrupted."

Disclosure by C. I. O. President Philip Murray, that he and other labor leaders "decried" the "reprehensible conduct" of "certain" Senators at a conference yesterday with President Roosevelt gave rise to speculation that the Administration may have intervened to block "surrender" of the bill's proponents.

Community War Fund and whether it presents an adequate response to the needs presented; that each constitute himself a "second front key-man" on the campaign committee; take up afresh the participation of his own business in the campaign; give priority above everything else to the recanvass of his own firm, to be completed with a full report to group headquarters in the Congressional Room at the Willard Hotel before the next noon report meeting, which will be held next Tuesday.

Graham asked at least 50 business leaders who believe they have already done a creditable job for the War Fund to volunteer their services beginning this morning, reporting to Lanier McLachlen, president of the Board of Trade, for assignments to call on other business executives and help them make a fresh start.

This morning, meeting at 9:30 a. m. in the board room of the Hamilton National Bank Building, 40 prominent businessmen responded to an invitation issued by Floyd D. Akers, campaign chairman, to plan for putting new life and new enthusiasm into War Fund response by business and commercial elements.

At a meeting of the Advance Gifts Unit called by Richard H. Wilmer, chairman, for today at 12:30 p. m. in the Jefferson Room of the Mayflower Hotel, the 250 volunteer unit workers will be asked to go out between now and Tuesday with the objective of obtaining $100 each in additional gifts, or a total of $25,000.

Army Private Hurt

While directing traffic at Nichols Avenue and S Street Southeast, Pvt. Francis E. Burgess, 28, Camp Springs, Md., attached to the Eleventh Precinct, was knocked down. At Casualty Hospital he was said to have suffered cuts and bruises to his legs and a neck injury.

Charges of failing to give full time and attention and driving a mechanically unsafe machine were placed against Joseph H. Brook, 44, New York City, driver of the car.

Edgar Adams, Negro, 8, of 201 Warren Street Northeast, suffered a fractured hip when crossing the street near his home. He was admitted to Gallinger Hospital.

without ill effects.

(The Agriculture Department announced in Washington that it was halting all distribution of frozen eggs through its regional offices and State welfare associations pending investigatio nof the Salem tragedy.)

(The egges were originally processed for lend-lease shipment which heightened Government interest in the investigation, the United Press reported. Investigators from the Army, the American Medical Association, the Federal Food and Drug Administration and the Surplus Commodity Administration were arriving to take part in the probe.)

The dinner was served in five separate wards last night to 460 of the hospital's 3000 inmates.

The poison struck swiftly. Within 15 minutes after the meal the victims began complaining of violent cramps. The first death occurred within an hour, and by 10 p. m., 10 had died. By midnight the toll reached 32.

More than 400 other men and women inmates are ill, but Dr. J. C. Evans, superintendent, said he expected them to recover.

Dr. Menne said he could not determine whether the poison originated in the frozen egg yokes from which the meal was prepared. He emphasized, however, that the yolks are most strongly suspected.

Gov. Charles A. Sprague, at a special meeting of the Board of Control today, said he had ordered all State institutions to stop serving any of the frozen eggs.

Dr. Evans told the board that he was much worried that if some patient had poisoned the food, there might be future attempts at poisoning.

"On the other hand, since many such eggs are shipped to the Army, there is the possibility that some saboteur poisoned a can," he said.

"Two employes who tasted the eggs said they tasted salty, and that tends to confirm the theory that poison was placed in the food. But another employe said they tasted soapy, so I don't know what to think.

"The theory of bacterial poisoning caused by spoilage or chemical reactions within the eggs, also cannot be discounted."

Borrowing of 9 Billions By Treasury to Set New Mark

Treasury Secretary Morgenthau last night announced that to meet the rising costs of war, the United States Treasury would borrow approximately nine billion dollars during December.

The total, to be sought from all possible sources, represents the largest single borrowing in the history of the world—surpassing even the huge Liberty Loan floated in September, 1918, which raised more than $6,000,000,000.

Although announced for December, the borrowing actually covers a three-month financing period—from November through January, inclusive—Morgenthau said, adding that the Treasury plans to finance the war on a bimonthly plan after the latter month.

"After completion of this borrowing, the Treasury does not expect to do major financing until after February," the Secretary said. "For its new money needs in January, the Treasury will rely upon further sales of tax savings notes, savings bonds and Treasury bills."

The nine billion dollars will be raised "partly through the continuing sales of savings bonds and tax savings notes, and partly through offerings of a number of new Treasury issues designed for every class and type of investor," the Secretary said.

Morgenthau said that the victory fund committees—manned by 44,000 volunteer workers across the country—will launch an intensive campaign November 30 to sell three series of offerings of new securities.

At the same time, he said, the war savings staff with its estimated 300,000 volunteers will seek to add "at least 7,000,000 more income-earners" to the ranks of those already investing regularly in war savings bonds through the payroll savings plan.

Along with about $2,500,000,000 in regular Treasury revenue to be expected during December, the borrowing will bring in approximately $11,500,000,000 for the month.

How much do you know about shoe soles?
A substantial single sole, if fine grained, will easily outwear double soles if they are coarse grained. Texture is more important a wear determinant than heft. In John Ward "Mastershoes" we can still offer soles, both single and double, which have the closely knit fibre structure which is most impervious to the abrasive action of hard usage. We offer no more than 2 pairs of these fulsome soled "Mastershoes" per person, to conserve our remaining supply.

Throw It Out

Six days of filibustering in the Senate have been a heavy drain upon the prestige of that legislative body. Citizens who are interested in getting on with the war cannot avoid a feeling of disgust when they realize that some representatives of the people are willing to put aside all the momentous issues of our day and indulge in an endless gab-fest designed to prevent action on a bill. This loss of prestige will hurt the Senate as a body as well as the Senators who are turning themselves into mere talking machines.

By now it is obvious, however, that the filibustering Southerners would rather block the antipoll-tax bill than preserve the dignity of the Senate or get ahead with the solution of war problems. The position they have taken is especially indefensible in wartime, but they have already demonstrated that they have no intention of conforming to democratic procedure. That throws a special burden upon the Senate majority, and particularly upon Majority Leader Barkley, to stop this morale-destroying performance before any further damage is done.

After all, the leaders of the Senate have the foremost responsibility of preventing that body from going into a seemingly endless tailspin during wartime. Knowing the volatile character of the issue this bill raises, they should not have permitted it to encroach upon the closing weeks of the session. In any event, their obligation to end the filibuster is now apparent, and that can apparently be done only by withdrawing the bill from further consideration. Indeed, the advocates of this measure would be well advised to transfer their fight from Washington to the capitals of States still taxing the voting privilege. That is where the fight should have been made in the first place.

It is unsatisfactory, of course, to have any bill blocked by a filibuster, but it would also be unwise for Congress to pass a bill so repugnant to the Constitution as this seems to be. Certainly the bill is not worth what its intrusion upon a wartime session of Congress is costing in terms of congressional prestige and wasted legislative time. There is now no alternative to throwing it out, and the sooner the better.

Before The Climax

A fierce showdown fight is bound to be fought before Africa can be cleared of the Axis. Hitler, we may be sure, will do everything possible to retain a foothold in that continent. Yet, as the showdown creeps nearer, it would seem that to the United Nations belong the advantages.

The outstanding factor is the drawing together of the two Allied columns moving eastward and westward. Whereas, a week ago, a distance of around 1500 miles separated them, the gap is now well under a thousand miles, and shrinks daily. The British Eighth Army under General Montgomery is approaching Bengazi, and is expected, within a week, to reach El Agheila, the high-water mark of the last British drive across Libya. At El Agheila Rommel is expected to halt the retreat of the Afrika-Korps and make a stand. But the Anglo-American forces under General Anderson have already moved into Tunisia, where a local French force has been giving battle to Axis troops who have been flown into that colony. At the same time there are reports that a Fighting French column is moving north from Lake Chad, with the ultimate object of severing the Axis lines in the Bizerte-Tunis-Tripoli sector.

The determining factor in the struggle turns, of course, on supply. How is this shaping up? General Montgomery's bases are now well over 500 miles from his advanced positions, and until the harbor of Tobruk is rebuilt and Bengazi taken and made available for Allied shipping, supplies for the Eighth Army must move overland from its Egyptian bases. The same is true to a degree of the Allied spearheads now in Tunisia. On the other hand, Bengazi is only about 120 miles from the nearest Axis supply centers in Sicily. However, under existing circumstances this distance can only be covered by air—a very limiting factor, indeed, with Axis air power still considerably engaged in Russia, and with the Allies in possession of North African airfields within easy reach of Bizerte and Tunis.

Yet, despite such handicaps, the indications now are that Hitler is sending men and supplies into Tunisia, as well as making some effort to reinforce and reequip Rommel's battered and depleted army in Libya. He realizes that the longer he can retain a foothold in Africa, particularly one commanding the narrow waist of the Mediterranean, the longer the Allies will be unable to exploit Africa as the springboard for an assault on the continent. The climactic stage in the Battle of Africa is still ahead.

Chaos Over Manpower

Conflicting reports as to how the President plans to straighten out the manpower muddle are symptoms of an internal struggle for control over labor for the duration. Chairman McNutt of the War Manpower Commission is known to have submitted to the White House a proposed executive order to strengthen the powers and extend the scope of his organization. No doubt the current reports that the President is about to centralize manpower controls in the hands of the War Department are the reply of military authorities to this move. In any event, the net result of this pulling and hauling is that little or nothing is being done toward achievement of the President's own aim of getting the right man in the right place at the right time.

How long must the country wait for a break in this deadlock? Key men in the most vital war industries are enlisting or being drafted into the armed services. Labor hoarding continues on a large scale. The employment of women and minority groups in war industry is seriously lagging. Upgrading of semiskilled workers and the breakdown of jobs so that they can be performed with less training are still hit-or-miss practices. In short, we are trying to fight a total war without any clear-cut program for efficient use of our manpower outside the armed forces.

There seems to be full agreement, for example, that some agency must set up a system of labor-utilization inspectors. Obviously our limited supply of labor cannot be allocated in the national interest until we know what the requirements of each plant and industry are and how effectively present working forces are being used. More than two months ago Chairman McNutt of the WMC pointed out to the Tolan Committee the need for labor-utilization inspectors. His suggestion was indorsed by Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the WPB, and Wendell Lund, director of WPB's labor production division. But no such inspectors have been provided. The WMC has attempted to make up for this deficiency by ordering sample manpower studies and by asking employers to survey their own use of manpower with the object of eliminating waste. These are poor substitutes for the systematic and comprehensive controls which our present shortage of labor demands.

It is evident, too, that any Nation-wide placement system must be built on the foundation of the United States Employment Service. But this service is not being strengthened to meet its inevitable responsibility. On the contrary, its own officials acknowledge in despair that it is disintegrating. Its personnel turnover of 7½ per cent a month because of low salaries and the uncertainty as to whether the local employment offices will be returned to State control after the war is progressively crippling the USES. Meanwhile a large part of the work this and other WMC units should be doing is being done by the Army's Civilian Personnel Division.

Every day that this chaotic organization persists we are wasting part of our national capacity to wage total war. President Roosevelt is said to be dissatisfied with the achievements of the WMC and therefore reluctant to centralize manpower controls in that agency. But an attempt to establish War Department control over civilian employment would be deeply resented, and with good reason. The President thus has a difficult decision to make, but it will not become easier through procrastination. At least he has the alternative of creating a new manpower agency which would consolidate the now conflicting functions of the WMC, the WPB and the Civilian Personnel Division. Or, better still, he could throw his influence behind the bill now taking shape in Congress to create a central office of war mobilization.

China's Future

There was an impeccable universality about the contribution of China's generalissimo, Chiang Kai-shek, to the Herald Tribune forum which would appeal to postwar reconstructionists of a world community. But, after all, this text is authentically Chinese. Confucius said that "all within the four seas are brothers," and the pattern of thinking of his disciples has always been universalist. To be sure, the center of that universe in Chinese cosmogony used to be China. But there was excellent reason for this feeling when the Chinese were wearing silk while the peoples of the Western world were still painting themselves in woad. It persisted, of course, even when the West had got to the garment stage, though the reason may have been as much because the sea rovers of the West were not overparticular about the methods they used in breaking down Chinese exclusionism as because of a Chinese sense of superiority. In any event an active xenophobia spread over China when the Western world found footholds in the "Middle Kingdom."

It was the resentment against the exploitation of China—which was insured by the extortion of special privileges—that gave the impetus to the revolutionists against the Manchu regime. That revolution occurred in 1911. And, as Chiang Kai-shek, who succeeded Sun Yat-sen as the head of the revolutionary movement, told the forum, it is still in progress. What, he asked, can we as Chinese mean by revolution when Free China is unified under the revolutionary government and is the undisputed mistress of that government? For answer the generalissimo goes back to Dr. Sun's famous three principles: national independence, progressive realization of democracy, and a rising level of living conditions.

The first-named will have been won for the country as a whole when the Japanese have been conquered. In that event the other powers will undoubtedly recognize in China a true partner on free and equal terms in the next world community. But the two remaining aims will take many a cycle of Cathay to realize, for they will always be a dynamic goal—as they are in other like-minded countries—of a progressive China. The language used by Chiang Kai-shek is at least in step with that of other leaders of the United Nations who are intrusted with the task of realizing the future. May their united visions be fulfilled by equally concerted action! Patriotism, as China's generalissimo said, quoting Edith Cavell, is not enough in this shrunken world.

Imperialist Order

Some days ago, at the Lord Mayor's dinner in London, Winston Churchill declared that Great Britain had not entered the war for profit or expansion but only for honor and for duty. But, he added, "In case there should be any mistake about it in any quarter: we mean to hold our own. I have not become the King's First Minister in order to preside over the liquidation of the British Empire." He was immediately set upon by a host of critics, Senator Pepper and Wendell Willkie among them, and berated as a standpat imperialist, lacking in recognition of the principles of the Atlantic Charter and the new international beatitudes. Wendell Willkie went so far as to read into Churchill's statement a defense of "the old imperialistic order."

This, of course, is nonsense. Mr. Churchill was not defending the "old imperialistic order," at least not in the speech referred to, though he was certainly defending the right of the British Empire to exist as an entity. And Mr. Churchill is far too much of a historian to hold the belief that there is anything unchanging about that empire. Indeed, it has constantly changed. In its treatment of certain areas—Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Burma—it has over the course of years shown as much statesmanlike liberality as we have shown in our relations with the Philippines. In the matter of India, about which so much emotional confusion exists in this country, the fact is that Mr. Churchill and his government are pledged to grant that country its freedom after the war. And we have no reason to assume Britain will not live up to its pledge.

What of the rest of the empire? Does Britain's policy fit into the pattern of "the old imperialistic order?" In part, no doubt, yes, though at this point a definition of that phrase is badly needed, and none is provided by Mr. Willkie. Certainly some of the broad-gauged humanitarian considerations which Mr. Willkie wants the world to apply to colonial possessions after the war have in greater or lesser measure long been applied by the British in their colonies. They have permitted other peoples access to the basic commodities produced by British colonies. They have not been far behind other colonial powers, if at all, in using the resources of their colonies for the health, education and development of the peoples of those areas. If, as Mr. Willkie suggests, the defense of these colonies has been "courageous but inadequate," the same charge applies with equal force to our rule in the Philippines.

Mr. Willkie, of course, would go further, and make it impossible for any nation to have any colonies, since he proposes to turn over such places as Malaya and the "islands of the Southwest Pacific" (sic) to an international administration, making them "wards" of the United Nations. But it is questionable whether that would necessarily be an improvement over the system that has prevailed hitherto. And it might lead to endless confusion. This is not to argue that the principle of trusteeship is itself at fault. On the contrary, that principle must in the future, as among the more peaceful and civilized nations has been the case in the past, increasingly govern the relations between the great powers and backward peoples living under their rule. The fact of the matter is that the problem of colonies is far too complicated to be solved by either a single pattern or by high-minded cliches and humanitarian daydreams, and can be solved only by marrying idealism to reality.

THE FLOOD-GATES ARE OPENING

The flood-gates are opening.
There are signs,
Sure, wild signs of storm today.
The waters gather—
Nothing shall stay.

And here are signs:
Blight on the vines
That clung too long
To yesterday—
The garden way.
They shall be torn, be loosed,
Hang dead and gray.
This hurricane shall strike
All, everywhere alike.

Everything you have
Toss in the common grave,
The all-engulfing wave.
For what you try to keep
Shall sink as deep, as deep
As stone.
Alone,
Yourself, your soul
You yet may save
If you go light,
Unburdened, through the water's night.

In Comparison

I had heard some grumblings about the Government cafeterias, and now that it has come out in print, I hope you will permit me to comment on it.

It might be well to prohibit all newcomers to Washington from eating in the Government cafeterias during their first month in the city. It might even be advisable to recreate the old eating joints we used to frequent away back in 1917-18, to eat in fly-infested, dingy restaurants, food which was fit for animals. It might do them good and make them appreciate all the more by letting them suffocate in some of the low-ceiling, dark, dirty and smelly eating rooms instead of enjoying their deliciously and scientifically prepared food in the well-lit, immaculate dining rooms of this era.

Oh, you ungrateful folks! Take it from one who has been all over the world, who has been eating in restaurants for the past 25 years here and abroad, that the Washington Government cafeterias are the best in the world, the most sanitary and the cheapest. If anything, I am rather particular about food, and I am saying it in all sincerity that I would rather eat lunch in the Social Security, Interior Department (the new), Commerce Department or any other of those Government cafeterias than at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York.

If the ladies would only be a bit quicker in making up their minds when fronting the counter, there would be less standing in line for many of the patrons who easily turn into grumbling humans. After all, it is not a husband they are called upon to choose; just a few dishes of food, and they don't have to wash the plates and cutlery either. J. ANTHONY MARCUS.

Northern Poll Tax

Has Mark Sullivan his tongue in his cheek or has he forgotten how to investigate his facts? He credits Senator Austin, a Republican, with a sterling viewpoint on States rights. Does he not know that Vermont has a poll tax amounting to about $6? New England States have poll taxes for the same reason that the Southern States have poll taxes excepting that the color is a little bit different.

WARREN T. JOHNSON.

Washington, Nov. 18.

Editor's Note: The State of Vermont has a poll tax from which there are several classes of exemptions. These include persons actually poor, honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy who claim exemption, and members of the State militia and fire department if the town so votes.

Federal Taxation Up To Date

May I have a few lines to speak for the American taxpayer and his right to know where he stands regarding the present and future? Congress and the Administration are dealing frantically at present with the crisis of farm and industrial labor because no one in either group was able to foresee what was inevitable. The cure—if it is a cure—is coming late and will prove costly in terms of production, delays and unity. The draft law was obsolete before it was written.

We shall have another bitter crisis within six months when the citizen is ordered to pay last year's income tax out of this year's income. I suggest that on March 15, 1943, a fourth to a third of the population will not be able to pay up because there is no money. Mr. Morgenthau has never been in the position of living on earned income or upon the profits of a business which even from month to month can vary disastrously. I would even go farther and suggest that the Secretary of the Treasury does not even understand what this can mean. His suggestion some months ago of paying two year's income tax out of one year's income displayed an amazing ignorance of the facts of economic life as they affect three-fourths of the population of the United States.

The citizens of the United States, who are paying for this war, not only with money but with blood, have a right to know where they stand and to pay their taxes as of the current year. No single element is so destructive of national morale as the tax situation at the present moment. It is the cause of immense anxiety and discontent in every part of the country. There is no quarrel as to the amount of taxes to be paid. The trouble is with the fashion of paying and the perpetual threat of the Secretary of the Treasury to ask for more money before the bill extracting the last payments has been signed. These threats are made in the face of the fact that half the population of the United States—the entire middle-class—does not know where the money is coming from or how much is being asked of them, and is faced with only the prospect of a severely diminished income for 1943 and succeeding years. This is the position of all professional men and women, all citizens with small businesses or factories. It does not encourage them to give all their energy and money to help win the war, when it appears that the Government will make not the slightest attempt to help them, but only shake a club and say, "You are going to be taxed more and more. It doesn't matter how impossible it is for you."

The whole tax plan of the Treasury Department has, it seems, been predicated upon what was done in England, overlooking entirely the fact that the English middle-class lives and has always lived largely upon cash in hand and not upon credit. American business is done almost entirely upon a basis of borrowed money. This is especially true of farmers and small business men. That was never true in England. The basis of taxation there is upon cash, and the income tax is paid in the current year. In this country, business is done on credit against the future and income taxes are paid a year behind. There is no parallel whatever between the economic basis of taxation in England and in this country. The present system of taxation can only end here in economic confusion and infinite human misery and discontent. It is not possible to draw money out of the economic vacuum toward which we are headed.

There are other phases of the situation which are bad. The sale of war bonds would be increased enormously if people knew where they stood financially. It is impossible to buy war bonds when a man does not know what his taxes for the coming year are going to be or where he is going to get the money to pay them. The sale of war bonds will diminish inevitably and progressively so long as the American citizen is forced to pay last year's taxes with next year's diminishing income. The number of war bonds cashed as quickly as possible will continue to increase at the present alarming rate, unless the taxpayer is given some consideration by Congress and the Treasury Department. It is no good taking in bond money by the front door while it pours out at the back. That is not financing the war. It is mere idiocy. The only thing which can stop it is to put the Government on an honest basis in relation to its citizens. If a man pays his income taxes currently, he can manage to live on what is left, however small. At least, he knows how much is left. Under the present system, he is perpetually in a state of financial horror.

The horror of the Secretary of the Treasury over the sales tax is both hypocritical and bad politics—two elements which are seldom linked together. I live in the State of Ohio, which has had a sales tax for more than 10 years. I have never heard the faintest complaint and Ohio has a surplus in its treasury of many million dollars. I lived for years in France, where the sales tax pulled the nation through a crisis when nothing else was effective. It is the soundest of all forms of taxation. One has only to look at the treasury of any State where there is a sales tax and question any of its citizens who is not a crank. Psychologically and politically, it is the best of all taxes. Any man is happier paying out a penny here and there, than paying out a lump sum when it hurts, especially when he is always one year behind. The Democratic administration, of which I personally am a strong supporter, is losing votes hand over fist, and of all those who are costing it votes the Secretary of the Treasury stands well out in front.

If democracy is anything, it is the people. When consideration of the people is utterly overlooked, only rebellion can follow. The people have a right to an honest basis for paying taxes, whether it is based on the Ruml plan, or something else. If this is not done, the reckoning is not far away—not much further than 1943 and absolutely certain in 1944. Not the smallest element in the recent Republican landslide was the widespread sense of divorce between Washington and the people of the United States. It was largely the vote of a citizenry being told perpetually and without consideration how to breathe, eat, sleep, etc.

The Post Impressionist

One President's Life Lesson

There was one President of the United States who never knew a moment's elation over his nomination, his election, his inauguration or his occupancy of the Chief Magistrate's office.

And that President was Warren Gamaliel Harding.

I knew him, all sides of him, and once I was given a clear look into the man's inner heart. He gave this glimpse to me in the Blue Room of the White House when none other was about.

The heart I looked into at its owner's invitation was a thoroughly troubled one.

I had had from a mutual friend who was at the Harding home in Marion, Ohio, the morning after the election, the information that the newly elected President was inexpressibly depressed by the news. Down deep in his humble soul he held a profound and indescribable reverence for the office of the Presidency. Just as deeply and sincerely did he hold a thoroughly unegotistic opinion of himself and his worthiness for the office. The news of his election to that high place literally crushed him. He definitely and openly believed himself totally unfitted for the place. He never had sought it. He was a party puppet. Gladly would he have remained in the United States Senate—an office he understood and loved and for which he felt in a considerable degree fitted. But that high pinnacle of the Presidency—he felt he was an intruder; a fallible neophyte in a holy of holies.

Warren Harding's was an honest, patriotic heart. He was enmeshed in a political snarl with those less honest than himself; with those who had infinitely less reverence for their country than he had. Friendships meant much—too much—to him. He was a companionable man—essentially so. Literally and in its most literal sense he was a "hail fellow well met." His was not a strong character as we count the strength of men in units of power to resist. He possessed all the human weaknesses — all? No, there was one he did not have: untruthfulness. He hated lying. And the longer he remained in the Presidency the more he loathed it, because he was constantly its victim and was made to suffer from it.

Now the bourne of all this build-up is a statement of what was the big lesson learned by Warren Harding from his unhappy presidential career.

One day when he had been so kind as to invite my wife, two small children and myself to lunch with himself and Mrs. Harding in the White House, he impulsively unbosomed himself to me. First he had thoughtfully relieved my young son of the overwhelming embarrassment of being a guest in that awesome place by ordering him, with simulated severity, to take Laddie (the big Airedale out on the Mall to exercise him. Mrs. Harding had taken my wife and daughter for a tour of the ramifications of the Executive Mansion. Then, when he and I were alone on a couch in the Blue Room, he played hooky from an important labor conference in his office, to put his hand on my knee and say:

"Strick, I haven't had a happy moment in this job. I have found out I have no friends at all—not one. I used to think I had friends—friends who liked me for my own sake. Now I find that all they care or have cared for me was as a means to getting something for themselves. And do you know—nobody tells me the truth! They always lie to me, for their own selfish interests. I have reached the point where, if I were to be asked to name the one sin for which a death penalty should be exacted, it would be the sin of lying. It is the terriblest sin possible. Some time ago a close friend of mine—for years one of my most intimate public associates—came to me to have me help extract his son from some sort of mess he had got himself into in the Naval Academy. I said to this friend; 'Now, before we go into this at all, there is just one thing I must know—is there any lie on the part of your son involved in this case?' After a moment he admitted that there was. 'Then,' I said to him, 'count me out. I will not try, even for so old a friend as you, to rescue anybody who has got himself into trouble through his own untruthfulness.'"

That was the big lesson Warren Harding's long and rough experience in private and public life had taught him. I shall never forget the intense expression on that swarthy and almost unbelievably handsome face and in his marvelously expressive eyes, as he told me this, pounding my knee vigorously as he did so.

Eventually this cumulative unhappiness "got him." When he started away on that ultimate trip to Alaska and other points—as any of his journalistic entourage will tell you (a trip from which he never returned alive)—his flesh looked like wax, as if not one single red corpuscle remained in his veins. He was a corpse essaying a pre mortem tour.

Solomons Aftermath

By Ernest Lindley

Japs Must Be Expected Again

THE BRILLIANT VICTORY in the Solomons saved our foothold on Guadalcanal. But, as Secretary Knox has warned, the Japs can be expected to come back again. They still have plenty of Navy. Our position in the Solomons is likely to remain precarious until our ground and air forces are established on other islands, to the northwest. In fact, more than a temporary pause in the fighting in that area is regarded as unlikely until we have occupied all of the Solomons and the Bismarck Archipelago.

LINDLEY

Various explanations have been given of the purpose of our offensive launched on August 7. But it must be assumed that the offensive was begun with the intention of continuing it until Rabaul, on New Britain, the principal Japanese base in that area had been captured. General MacArthur's drive toward the northern shore of eastern New Guinea must be considered as part of the same general plan.

MacArthur was understood to favor concentrating first on the expulsion of the Japs from eastern New Guinea. On the map that is the more direct route to Rabaul. But that plan would have required sending an amphibious expedition to the northern coast, in the face of several Japanese airfields, and with Japanese naval and air forces on the flank in the Solomons and at Rabaul. At Guadalcanal, it was possible to land forces before the enemy had installed an air force—and barely in time to prevent it from putting the airfield to its own uses.

WRESTING the Solomons and the Bismarck Archipelago from the Japanese would serve both defensive and offensive purposes. It would remove to a relatively safe distance the threat to Australia on the east and make more secure, as well as shorten, our supply lines to Australia. It would bring our air forces in bombing distance of the major Japanese base at Truk, in the Carolines, and put us in behind the Japanese outposts in the south Central Pacific, on the Marshall and Gilbert Islands. It would provide also one good jumping-off place for a later and more ambitious offensive, toward either the north or the west.

It is no secret that our Solomons offensive has not worked out as planned. The reaction of the Japanese probably was more severe and persistent than was expected. They have put so much effort into driving us out that it may well be that they have had to postpone or alter their own plans for offensive action elsewhere. They have not been able to use many of their troops, but they have expended a great many planes and no small number of warships and transports. Although they have the advantage of bases nearer than ours, the supplies for those bases must be brought over long distances, which adds to the strain on Japanese shipping. There is reason to believe that the Japanese are beginning to be pinched by lack of cargo ships.

THE VIGOR and determination of the Japanese reaction and our serious losses of warships in the early stages have compelled us to keep pouring in more of our own strength. Whether it was wise to choose a point so distant from our own bases for what has become a major battleground is open to question. But it is not a question worth exploring at the moment. Guadalcanal has been reinforced, the Japs have been repulsed again at sea with heavy losses; and it stands to reason that whatever thought may have been given at one time to attempting to evacuate Guadalcanal has been discarded.

Meanwhile, MacArthur's arm of the pincer has been making steady progress, and appears to be on the verge of success in the Buna area. Getting supplies through the mountains and jungles of New Guinea is, however, a formidable problem. Even if his attacking forces are powerful enough to carry through, the establishment and maintenance of air bases on the northern coast probably would require sea transport. But if the northern coast of eastern New Guinea can be cleared of the Japs, American bombers can quickly intensify the discomfort of the Japanese in Rabaul and along the whole line of the Solomons.

As the President had said some weeks ago when the outlook was dark, the loss of Guadalcanal would not be decisive. We would simply fall back on our existing line running through the New Hebrides and New Caledonia. Likewisee, he avoided describing the repulse of the Japs on November 13-15 as decisive. Strong as they were, the attacking forces apparently did not include any aircraft carriers. Although the Japs have suffered heavy losses of carriers, informed sources warn against assuming that they have none left. They may be holding what they have for emergency or for other actions. The bombardment group which spear-headed the attack contained only two old battleships of the Kongo type. Whether there were additional battleships in the separate force which escorted the troop and cargo ships was not announced in the original communique.

Only the high command knows whether it will be possible for us to resume the offensive in the Solomons in the near future; or whether the plan will be to stand fast and let the Japs come back for more punishment. The answer may lie in the progress of the campaign in North Africa, which until it has reached a resting point, must have first call on shipping and the naval forces to protect it.

Rationing Change Not to Alter Rules for Pleasure, Business

The Office of Price Administration decided officially yesterday that the rules on pleasure and business driving will not be changed in spite of the reduction, effective Sunday, in the value of "A" gasoline ration coupons in the East from four to three gallons each.

The rules are:

1. Holders of "A" gasoline books may use their rations for any purposes they choose, including such pleasures as driving to race tracks, although the Government hopes that non-essential driving will be limited voluntarily.

2. Holders of "B" and "C" books may use 90 miles per month of their driving for "other purposes" but must use all the remaining mileage permitted by their gasoline ration for "occupational driving." Technically, this permits "B" and "C" book holders to do some pleasure driving, but officials said local ration boards were justified in being suspicious if cars using "B" and "C" rations appear at such places as race tracks.

At the same time, the Office of Defense Transportation launched a nation-wide "Don't Travel" campaign.

Joseph B. Eastman, director of ODT, said the "Don't Travel" appeal was designed to focus attention of the American public on the gravity of the passenger transportation problem.

"The time is here," he said, "when all the American people must understand, what many of them now realize, that unnecessary travel can do real and serious harm to the war effort."

He said overcrowding on many rail and bus lines already has become serious, and with intercity travel by passenger automobile almost out of the picture and troop movements increasing, "conditions will become much worse, unless the American public comes to the rescue."

"I urge you most earnestly to ask yourself before you purchase a travel ticket or board a bus or train if you really need to make that trip," Eastman said.

Eastman explained that the "Don't Travel" drive is being worked out by ODT in collaboration with the Association of American Railroads and the National Association of Bus Operators.

Canadian Publicity

By Janet R. Keith

Emerges At Last

GOVERNMENT information, called publicity by its friends and propaganda by its enemies, is emerging as one of the most important and difficult tasks of the war. Its purposes are fourfold. First, it must give the public news about the war effort in such a way as to arouse fighting spirit and strengthen morale. Second, it must withhold from the public such information as would give aid and comfort to the enemy. Third, it must attempt to undermine the confidence and morale of the enemy, and fourth, it must try to promote better understanding among allies.

In the fourth task, that of promoting understanding amongst its allies, Canada's publicity has fallen down very badly since the outbreak of war. It has fallen particularly badly with respect to the job of making Canada better understood in the United States.

With the shyness of a demure schoolgirl the Canadian government decided early in the war that Canada should avoid studiously any kind of "high pressure publicity" in the United States. The argument given was that a staff of Canadian publicists in the United States would give the isolationists (all this was before Pearl Harbor) a golden opportunity of saying that Canada was trying to push the United States into the war. As a result of this persistently bashful policy, Canada's only publicist during the first three years of the war was one newspaperman attached to the staff of the Canadian Legation.

Negative Attitude Harmful

This negative attitude naturally bore harmful fruit. In the first place there was nobody in the United States to tell the American people about the extent of Canada's war effort. But that wasn't the worst of it. When pernicious rumors about Canada began to circulate south of the border, there was no one to challenge them and prove they were false. When American editors wanted to get the truth about Canada, there was no place for them to go. And Canada, which is half British and half American in its outlook, missed a wonderful opportunity to serve as a sort of interpreter between the nations of Great Britain and the United States.

The consistent refusal to set up a Canadian publicity bureau in the United States was made ridiculous by the fact that other nations were operating such offices with signal success. The British, the Czechs, the Poles, the Dutch, the Norwegians, the Chinese, the Australians, the Indians and the Belgians—all these countries had established official information offices in the United States. Yet next door neighbor Canada still had one lone newspaperman.

Finally Canadian newspapers began to raise a howl of protest, demanding that the government take immediate action. The Prime Minister's answer was the assignment of Charles Vining, outstanding writer, advertising man and executive, to the task of surveying completely the state of Canadian publicity to the United States. Mr. Vining's report to the Prime Minister was never made public. But out of it has come a new deal for Canadian publicity and the setting up late this summer of a structure called the War Information Board.

War Information Board

Canada's War Information Board is similar in many respects to the Office of War Information. It is responsible, like the OWI, for coordinating the publicity work of all government agencies. The Canadian counterpart of Elmer Davis is, appropriately enough, none other than Charles Vining, author of the confidential report to the Prime Minister. As constituted at present, the board has five branches: Domestic information, external affairs, liberty and research, technical (to supervise radio, photograph, moving pictures, poster and exhibit activities), and a speaker's branch to organize public addresses on topics related to the Canadian war effort.

Already the War Information Board has tackled the problem of Canadian publicity in the United States. Information offices have been opened in New York and Washington. It may have been more than mere chance that the opening of the United States offices coincided with a speech by Elmer Davis in which he praised the "candor and common sense" of the Canadian statement on the Dieppe raid.

Mr. Vining himself has made it clear that "there will be no attempt to ballyhoo the virtues of Canada nor to put pressure on United States public opinion." He feels that his main task will be to tell Americans the truth about Canadian action on military and industrial fronts, and let them judge for themselves whether the record is good or bad.

Gun-Fighting At Sea

By Paul Schubert

Battleships Go Into Action

WITHIN a week, recently, we heard of the use of battleships in offensive action at two widely separated points—off Guadalcanal in the Solomons, and off the coasts of French Morocco and Algeria.

SCHUBERT

In both cases the warfare going on was amphibian warfare. The problem was the storming of a beach, the landing of an invasion force. The battleship is ideally suited for the support of action of this kind. Battleship main batteries throw a heavy weight of metal for very long ranges—given aircraft spotting they can fire over the horizon at targets 18 to 20 miles away. Battleship armor is stout enough to hold off the fire of all but the heaviest coast defense guns—the few places where such guns exist would hardly be chosen as landing points in any case. Battleship antiaircraft batteries, in their present form, put up the most murderous antiaircraft barrage faced by airmen anywhere—and in amphibian warfare the battleship can be employed at times when air interference is difficult or impossible, at dawn, or at night, or under cover of fog or overcast. The battleship is also stout enough to screen landing operations from disturbance by hostile surface forces unless those are in powerful concentration.

Altogether this type of man-of-war is well suited indeed to lie offshore as guardian of a modern invasion movement.

Nor is this the end of the battleship's usefulness.

THEORETICALLY the heavy dreadnought is the stoutest and most impregnable of all gun-fighting ships. It has held this place for well over a quarter of a century. Yet through most of the World War and during a good part of this one, the battleship's very value has wrapped the type in a sort of strategic cotton-wool and made it seem too precious to risk.

Admirals haven't hesitated to send frail destroyers and slender cruisers into situations of the greatest danger, but when it came to the dreadnought they have pulled their punches time and again. Instead of treating the giant battle-wagons as heavy weight sluggers able and ready to mix it in any company, these ships have become the victim of an unwritten belief that the loss of a battleship amounts to a national calamity, and that therefore the dreadnoughts should be kept out of trouble rather than sent into it. The dreadful rumblings of the "air attack" advocates have only served to tighten the grip of mental habits already formed.

But now the chips are down. No party to the war is holding back anything that can be used for punching power—and suddenly we discover that the battleship is the heavy tank of sea warfare. The battleship is a ship of the line. In football terms, it is the forward wall, the hole-opener, the plodding but steady ground gainer. It lacks the spectacular "forward passing" ability of the aircraft-carrier. It's seldom that a lineman gets away for a long run.

But this old slugger—especially in its new 30-knot form—takes on an altogether new value if used with daring and imagination, if used with the same vigor that cruisers and destroyers are used. There are, to be sure, a number of things that it can't do, but there are also a number of things that the battleship can do better than any other type of ship.

The gun is a weapon of close contact, as contact is measured in modern terms. An infighting weapon.

The closer the contact, the smaller the gun that can be used effectively.

This truth was demonstrated all over again in the first night naval action of the recent series of Solomon Islands battles, when Rear Admiral Callaghan took the heavy cruiser San Francisco into close quarters against a Japanese battleship.

THE SAN FRANCISCO'S main battery mounts nine 8-inch guns; they are backed by a number of lighter weapons. She was up against a ship mounting 14-inch guns. Under ordinary circumstances, assuming gunnery of equal excellence, the heavy ship would have all the advantage.

But 8-inch guns fire much more rapidly than 14-inch. And at the short, almost point-blank ranges of night battle, modern 8-inch guns probably have enough penetrating power to get through most of the armor of Japan's old Kongo class battleships. Should an attacking cruiser get the jump at short range and start pouring accurate rapid fire into a battleship's upper works, where the fire-control stations are located, it is possible that she might silence her heavier opponent—the odds would be good enough to warrant the trial.

Especially at night, each type of ship has its moment, even the paper-hulled motor torpedo boat.

But for an out-and-out slugging contest, the ship with the punch wins.

Sharp Drop in Winter Vacationers Indicated Nationally, But D. C. Expects Large Gain

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 19.—The demands and restrictions of wartime have put a serious crimp in the winter vacation plans of the American people.

Only about half as many people plan to take vacations this winter as took vacations last winter, according to a recent nation-wide study by the Institute.

Not only fewer people will take vacations, but those who plan to take them will vacation closer to home because of wartime travel restrictions.

Here are the approximate numbers going on vacations this winter, as compared to last winter:

Took vacation last winter	8,000,000
Intend taking vacation this winter	4,500,000

This sharp reduction will be bad news for many vacation areas, but, on the other hand, many of the resorts are already filled with men in the armed forces, who will take the place of the usual vacation throngs.

Washington Popular

The one spot in America which will be host to more vacationers this winter than last winter is Washington, already crowded to the bursting point. About 60 per cent more people will crowd into the nation's capital this winter, principally to visit friends and relatives now employed by the Government.

Indications are that New England also will do better than the rest of the country because it is located near the populous centers of the East.

The Institute survey discloses that the average distance to be traveled by this year's vacationers will be only about two-thirds that of last winter. Consequently, generally speaking, the areas located farthest from the great population centers will be hardest hit.

Areas Hard Hit

In this category are Florida and the Southwest. The number of people who will travel to these places may be reduced this winter by more than half.

Far and away the greatest number of people who say they plan to take vacations will travel by railroad. About one-fifth of them say that they intend to travel by bus.

Many who intend to travel only short distances say they are planning to use their automobiles, in spite of the gasoline rationing program and the tire shortage situation.

Most of the people will be taking time off from war activities to visit either relatives or friends. Many say they will be visiting sons or relatives in the armed forces.

Others say they are going to go on vacations simply because they always take their vacations in the winter in preference to the summer. And there are the usual number who find it necessary to move to another part of the country during the cold weather because of bad health.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Double Feature

Uncle Sam may wage war on the "double feature." The other day Lowell Mellett, chief of the Bureau of Movies of the Office of War Information came out publicly for cutting it out for the duration.

* * * *

Mr. Mellett declares the double feature is harmful "to the Nation's mental, physical and spiritual development" in time of war, and this column seconds the motion.

* * * *

Talk about a loss of manpower hours! Did you ever stop to think of the woman-power hours wasted in unnecessarily long stays in the movies of America?

* * * *

If a way could be found to turn to productive purposes the time spent by millions of Americans sitting through double feature programs there would be no further production problems.

* * * *

This country in its laziest and most futile mood is to be seen day and night yawning at moronic animated cartoons, terrible second string pictures and awful assorted shorts. And 80 per cent of the audience only came to see one picture!

* * * *

Suppose the regular theater operated on the same plan? Imagine having to stand for two jugglers, a trained seal, an abridged "East Lynne," a lecture on Tibet and three child elocutionists on the same program with "Life With Father."

* * * *

Suppose the Government wished to deliver an important message to a Broadway theater audience but had to crowd it in between "She Loved Him But He Moved Away," a troup of acrobats and some skating acts?

* * * *

Talk about morale killers! At least 30 per cent of the bad tempers and low spirits in America today can be traced to husbands who have been dragged to neighborhood picture houses and forced to sit through two hours of tripe to reach the one-hour feature.

* * * *

Mr. Mellett has something when he says the movie programs injure the people "mentally and physically." After a few nights at double features a man has no mentality. And his vitality is lowered to a point where he has but one desire—to go out and turn groundhog.

* * * *

The picture industry has millions of dollars but it still hasn't bought itself one pruning knife.

* * * *

It's now a question whether the neighborhood picture houses are offering an entertainment or just a narcotic.

* * * *

Why ban drugs and still run those non-stop movie programs?

Things Dear to the Heart

I'm sentimental in a way,
Old trinkets I hold dear;
Mementos of a bygone day,
My loves and my career.

Old ticket stubs I still possess
For some forgotten show;
And these old letters here
I guess
I really shouldn't show.

Well! Here's a lock of baby hair,
A charivari cigar.
But dearest of them all lies
there—
The key to my first car.

Senate Filibuster

By Mark Sullivan

Serves An Informative Purpose

THE SENATE filibuster against the bill forbidding poll-taxes in States can perform a useful service in respects not directly connected with the issue. It can enable the public to learn how easily, and how frequently, it is led into incorrect impressions about public matters. Demand for passage of the poll-tax bill, and criticism of those who oppose, is based upon a welter of misconceptions.

SULLIVAN

A telegram of protest against the filibuster, and endorsement of the poll-tax measure, was sent to the Senate and made public, by 21 persons, including some of the highest standing. The telegram charged that Senators opposing the measure "are endeavoring to continue the discriminatory poll-tax. . . ." By "discriminatory" the signers of the telegram meant discrimination on grounds of race, discrimination between Negroes and whites. That this was their meaning is proved by a further sentence in the telegram, calling for "immediate repeal of those laws which encourage discrimination because of race, color or religion."

Now the poll-tax laws in eight Southern States are not discriminatory as between the races. They are not discriminatory in any respect whatever. To call these laws discriminatory, it would be necessary to say that literally every law of any kind is discriminatory. The sole discrimination is between those who conform to the law, and those who do not. The poll-tax laws merely say that a citizen, before voting, must have paid a poll-tax. The law applies to whites exactly the same as to Negroes. A Negro can pay the tax and vote, exactly as a white person can. Nonpayment of the tax is a bar to a white man voting, the same as to a Negro. True, there is discrimination between races in some Southern States. But the poll-tax laws are not discriminatory.

AN INCORRECT impression, almost universal, is that those opposing the poll-tax bill in Congress are by that fact trying to preserve poll-taxes as such. This is not true. In the debates, Senator after Senator from Southern States have said they think the poll-tax laws ought to be repealed. Senator Connally of Texas, as I recall, used the word "outmoded." He meant that just as poll-tax qualifications for voting, and similar qualifications, have been repealed in Northern States, most of which formerly had them, so ought they now to be repealed in Southern States. The sole insistence of most of the Southern Senators is that the repealing be done by the States themselves, voluntarily—not imposed on the States by compulsion of the Federal Government.

Actually, poll-taxes have already been repealed by all the Southern States except 8. In one of these, Tennessee, action looking toward repeal is under way. True, in some of the remaining States, the poll-tax is embedded in the constitution, and hence is cumbersome to repeal. But this does not alter the fact that sentiment favors repeal, or the reasonable certainty that repeal will come. And decidedly, neither this condition nor any other alters the fundamental principle in the present controversy—the principle, that fixing qualifications for voting shall continue to be the right of the States, and should not be taken over by the Federal Government.

IF THE poll-tax has been, is being, and can be ended by action of the States themselves, why the present demand that it be done by the Federal Government? And why is this extremely controversial demand pressed at a time when the country is at war, when domestic controversy ought to be minimized in the interest of national unity for war? Answer that—and you will know most of the story.

Without imputing particular motives to all who demand action by Congress, it is a fact that much of the more strident demand springs from radical sources. What they wish can be inferred from their broad attitude on many aspects of government and society. They are engaged in what, when they are candid, they frankly speak of as revolution. Keystone of any revolution in the American system of government must be the breaking down of the States as units of government; taking away from them functions they exercise, depriving them of powers assigned to them by the Constitution.

In any attempt to accomplish this, a fundamental necessity is to take away from the States their right to fix the qualifications of voters. This is the cornerstone of government. Take it away from the States, and little will be left of the States as governments.

This aspect of the present controversy in Congress is little seen or understood. Time can make it clear, and this is the justification for delay. The controversy in Congress so far has been mainly technical and parliamentary—whether the bill was properly acted upon by the committee that considered it, whether the procedure by which attempt is made to bring it on the floor is correct. Assuming this will be settled, and the bill comes upon the floor for debate on its merits, the true and broad implications of the measure will be made clear by some of the ablest men in the Senate, from the North as well as from the South.

Durocher Retains Job as Manager of Dodgers

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ Post Haste Returns $118.80 at Bowie

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

We'd say an anguished scream of borerom is perfectly permissible the next time you read about the Brooklyn Dodgers and their various stages of flux. For weeks on end, the sports pages have been chronicling in lengthy and repetitious recitations the doings of the Dodgers or, more frequently, the denial of Dodger doings.

POVICH

It has been a muddled marathon that got its start last summer when it was first rumored that Larry MacPhail would kiss off his job as general manager of the club and join the Army. The sports pages embraced that one as if MacPhail joining the Army were tantamount to the opening of a second front. Just when it became a tired, fagged-out old rumor, MacPhail breathed new life into the story by stating positively that he would join the Army.

When MacPhail joined the Army is was reported in the papers in the crash-bang style of the disclousure of a startling fact. Even before the subscribers could suppress a yawn, the boys on the papers took off on another 40-day siege of a suspected fact: That Branch Rickey would be MacPhail's successor as general manager of the Brooklyn Club.

At space rates, the play-by-play on the Rickey angle would have topped the Dodgers' gate receipts for the season. The formula was almost rigid. On Sunday, Rickey was to be the new manager of the club; on Monday, Rickey was declining to comment; on Tuesday, the deal for Rickey was falling through; on Wednesday, Rickey was talking about a bigger battle than baseball and hinting he'd go into war work; on Thursday, Rickey was supposedly headed for New York to talk terms with the Brooklyn directors; on Friday, Rickey was still in St. Louis saying he might consider the Brooklyn job; on Saturday, Rickey was out of the Brooklyn picture, definitely; on Sunday again Rickey was back in the Brooklyn picture.

For weeks it was neck-and-neck between Stalingrad holding forth against the Nazis and Rickey holding forth on the sports pages. Stalingrad finally outlasted him, when the truth about Rickey was surrendered. Flash! Rickey was to be Brooklyn's general manager, a fact completely unknown to the Hottentots of darkest Africa, and unsuspected only by them.

But suspense was overlapping suspense for the individual, and we mean individual, who by this time wasn't thoroughly fed up on seemingly tireless stories out of Brooklyn. Even before the Rickey rumor was completely dry-eared, there was the business about Lippy Leo Durocher. The tip was out that the Lip was out—as the Dodgers' manager.

The St. Louis Cardinals, as pennant winners, couldn't command the long-distance championship as a topic against the Dodgers. Durocher remarked casually that he was thinking of joining the Navy, and the boys were off again. Who would be Durocher's successor? That was new fuel.

They strung that one out for weeks. As the mood struck him, Durocher reiterated that he would join the Navy, or denied the whole business. When it was ascertained that Rickey would be the club's new boss, the speculation about Durocher was fanned anew. There were reasons why Durocher wouldn't be back as manager of the club. You read 'em every day.

You read that Durocher, if he didn't get a commission, was sure fire to be drafted anyway. "His wife's in the dress-designing business and makes more money that Leo does. No children, no dependents, savvy?" You read that with Rickey in, Durocher was out anyway. They wouldn't hit it off.

Besides, you read, Rickey had his own preferences. Ray Blades, the Columbus manager would get Durocher's job. The next day it was Pepper Martin, the old Wild Horse who had done a swell job managing Sacramento and was known to be high in Rickey's favor. Tomorrow, Mickey Rooney perhaps.

Suddenly, you read in the next day's headlines that among the candidates for the job was a fellow named Durocher, Leo himself. He wasn't quitting. He was coming East to talk the whole thing over with Breadon. That was early this week. He finally arrived in New York yesterday. The whole managerial business was interspersed with denials by Rickey who, like Durocher, lives in St. Louis, and finally hit upon the bright idea of a tryst with Durocher in New York, which is not around the corner.

Meanwhile, from another source, California, the Dodgers broke into print. Dolf Camilli, their first baseman, was quitting, despite his $20,000 salary. Rickey, viewing it as a maneuver to duck a threatened salary cut, bade him godspeed into retirement. That was Monday. On Tuesday, he dispatched a club official to Camilli's home in an attempt to talk him out of retirement. It was more Brooklyn rhubarb.

Tell me, do you really care?

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 19.—The biggest man in the kingdom of baseball today is crusty old Clark Griffith, long-time president of the Washington Senators and the game's No. 1 lobbyist.

Griff gave baseball a special charter back in 1912, when he artfully coaxed the late Willim Howard Taft to throw out the first ball at the opening of the Washington season. Every President since then has done the job and has dutifully posed accepting a gold pass from Griff. And Griff has seen to it that every important man in the Senate and in the House has been given an annual pass.

CONSIDINE

Over the years he has built up a lot of good will. He was able to persuade Newton Baker and General Peyton March (the latter an inveterate baseball fan) from closing baseball down on July 4, 1918. Griff went before them and won a reprieve for the game until Labor Day of that year. It meant a lot of money to the game.

Baseball now needs all the good will Griff has astutely built up through the years. Maybe more. Test of the old man's power as a lobbyist was made after Pearl Harbor when he engineered the now famous letter from Roosevelt to Landis. But a lot of obstructions to the game have cropped up since then.

Many of the game's implements, or portions of the implements, are now rationed, and the manufacturers of such equipment stand far down the line in the list of agencies which have essential restrictions which threaten to do to big league baseball what the restrictions on gas and tires did to the bush leagues.

There is, of course, the matter of many players going into the services—about which Griff can do, and wants to do, nothing. There is the threat that the remaining able-bodied men might be drafted for defense plants or farms. There are restrictions on salaries over $25,000—which affects Griff himself, the 15 other big league presidents and a handful of managers and players.

The trickiest baseball problem Griff will have to straighten out in Washington is how the game will fit into the Government's salary freezing plans. Will it be illegal, for instance, for Brooklyn to cut Bobo Newsom's $20,000 per annum? Will it matter, to the Government, that Newsom may not be worth $20,000 a year? How about Joe DiMag? Suppose the Yanks want to cut him because his 1942 season was something less than terrific? Can DiMag prove that the old baseball habit is against the law?

The salary freezing works both ways, of course. The Cards were very poorly paid last season, but they rushed to the front, won the World Series and made a lot of money for the tight-fisted St. Louis firm. Can the firm now stand behind the skirts of the law and refuse to grant obviously justified salary increases? Or will the sterling Kurowski, Marion, Brown and those other ill-paid players be forced to play again for a wage that would dismay even a Philly?

The big question for which Griff must find the answer is whether baseball itself will get another green light from the President. The doughty old magnate's job is to see that it does. He has this much on his side: A genuine belief in the infallibility of the game, a solemn conviction that a Nation without baseball is a Nation lacking good, clean entertainment. And he has a way of getting over those beliefs to the men who make our laws.

Baseball is in the most perilous spot in its history, graver by far than the crisis of 1918 and the ignominious era of the Black Sox trial. But it can take this comfort: The best possible man for the job is in Washington, tugging on every string in sight.

P. S.—Blinded, perhaps, by the fact that we've never seen Willie Pep fight, we're picking old Chalky Wright to slap out a decision tomorrow night at the Garden, thus retaining the world's feather-weight championship of New York . . . Reports are that Errol Flynn is better than O. K. in "Gentleman Jim," whose technical adviser was our Ed Cochrane. Flynn used to box professionally . . . Heywood Broun's old baseball novel, "The Sun Field," will open as a play here next month . . . There was a report that only Annapolis newspapermen would be permitted to cover the Army-Navy game, and that Navy photographers would handle the lens work. But it's as baseless as was moving the game from Philadelphia . . . 14 Notre Dame seniors will be playing their final game at South Bend when the Irish take the field against Northwestern Saturday . . . Picking an all-America this year—with so many highly touted teams flopping like seals—will be a task to start Walter Camp spinning in his mausoleum.

Long-Shots Again Have 'Field Day'

Double Pays $552; Toss Up, 4th Race Winner, Pays $163; Gilbert Saddle Star

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Bowie, Md., Nov. 19.—The epidemic of long shots that has been spreading since the opening of Bowie was in evidence again today. While there wasn't a pay-off to match yesterday's $224 mutuel on Gloryland, the program was bristling with healthy prices and favorite players went down swinging to the shrieks of the long-shot players making their killings.

The program opened with the result board lights blazing across the board payoff of $118.80 to win, $58.40 to place and $27.10 to show on Mrs. C. R. White's Post Haste. This horse was up for sale at Pimlico but no one would bid enough to get him under the hammer. Today he came home two lengths in front of F. Weller's Belmike with W. S. Jacobs' Troon third in a field of 12.

Johnny Gilbert, who rode three winners on the card, brought home Sunset Boy, owned by S. W. Labrot, jr., in the second race. Although this winner paid only $10.80 in his own right, he put the finishing touches on a $552.80 daily double by winning by two and a half lengths from Hard Telling. Grand Gay was third in this sprint.

The Groton Stable's Toonerville won the third race at a mere $9.70 pay-off but the mutuel department had plenty of cash to pay out in the fourth event. This time Sammy Hicks' Toss Up, an invader from New York, galloped home two and a half lengths in front of the closest opposition and his few backers collected $163.40 to win, $41.40 to place and $13 to show.

Gilbert rode his second winner of the day in the fifth race when he booted Mrs. Louise Palladino's War Page to victory over Ariel Patrol. This pay-off didn't reach telephone numbers but the return was a comfortable $16.80.

Gilbert came back in the sixth race to better the price. He was aboard Mrs. C. M. Feltner's Butcher Boy. The son of Waygood got in a blanket finish to win by a scant nose. The winning mutuel was one of $23.80 despite the fact that Butcher Boy was winning his second victory of the meeting and his fourth in his last five starts.

Racing Sheet Ban Awaits Court's Verdict

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 19.—The State Supreme Court reserved decision today on application by publishers of racing publications for a temporary injunction restraining License Commissioner Paul Moss from banning publication and distribution of horse race information sheets in the city.

Samuel B. Stewart, jr., attorney for the Triangle Publications, publishers of the Morning Telegraph, Daily Racing Form and Daily Racing Tab, denied that they were anything but "a trade journal of the sporting world—particularly horse racing."

Stewart said that while the 109-year-old Morning Telegraph was not an issue in the case because Commissioner Moss had admitted he was mistaken when he placed it in the same category with the other papers, "it must be taken into consideration that these other so-called racing sheets are on the same plane with the Morning Telegraph, and to permit publishing of the Morning Telegraph should automatically grant the same concession to the others."

The court ordered both parties to submit all affidavits by Monday afternoon.

Conn Thinks He'll Box Again After the War

By the Associated Press

New Cumberland, Pa., Nov. 19.—Corpl. Billy Conn thinks the war will be over in plenty of time for him to take up his ring career again.

"I'm young and in great shape," Pittsburgh's 25-year-old contender for Joe Louis' heavyweight crown said today, "and I'll still be young when this war's over."

Handsome Billy hopes the Brown Bomber feels the same way because "I'd just love to meet him again."

Conn is teaching this Army reception center's boxing team how to do it the Johnny Ray way—and he's enthusiastic about his job. Said he:

"I don't find teaching hard. I just tell them what my manager, Johnny Ray, told me. He's a great teacher."

Billy is unable to understand why a Louis-Conn title match couldn't be arranged if the USO or other service organizations benefited from all proceeds.

"I read in the papers where some sailor, marine, soldier or coast guardsman is in a bout," he said, "I don't see why they won't let us fight, but I'm willing to wait until the war's over because we all know winning that fight is most important."

Should a match be arranged, Conn is confident he can get in top shape within a month.

Duck Supply Ample, House Group Told

By the Associated Press

Dr. Ira N. Gabrielson, chief of the Federal Fish and Wildlife Service, said yesterday the northern breeding grounds of migratory wildfowl reported more than four times as many birds this year as in the ebb years of 1934 and 1935.

The duck population has been restored, Gabrielson told the House Wildlife Committee, to the point where "we are not worrying about the duck supply.

"The problem now is harvesting the crop properly."

Gabrielson said there had been "progressively fewer complaints during the past three years over migratory wildfowl regulations than at any other time since the wildlife service was established."

He said it was too early to predict what effect war conditions would have on duck shooting, but that duck stamp sales up to October 1 amounted to $265,913, more than double the revenue to the same date last year.

Ohio State Can Clinch Big Ten Title by Beating Michigan

Wisconsin-Minnesota Game May Have Bearing On Championship; Unbeaten Teams Favored

By Edward W. Cochrane

International News Service Sports Writer

New York, Nov. 19.—Victory for Ohio State over Michigan Saturday would give the Buckeyes the championship of the Big Ten. That is why this game occupies the center of the football spotlight as the Nation's top teams rush to the end of this hectic campaign.

Ultimate decision in other conference and sectional races will not be reached for another week. The "big four"—Georgia, Georgia Tech, Boston College and Tulsa—seem certain to keep their records clean for another week and continue to entertain hopes of appearing in Sugar and Rose Bowl battles to be presented New Year's Day in New Orleans and Pasadena.

The championship of the big ten will be decided on a percentage basis. If Ohio State wins it will have five wins and one defeat, which is a higher percentage than it is possible for another team to compile. But should the Buckeyes be whipped, which is far from being beyond the realm of possibility, the race will be thrown into a two or three way tie again, with the final decision held off for at least another week.

Badgers Must Win

Wisconsin has won three and lost one and can go into the lead with four and one by beating Minnesota, if the Buckeyes lose. Michigan can move up to three and one with a victory over the Buckeyes, and then have Iowa left, which game could put the Wolverines in a tie with Wisconsin at the finish.

All of which adds up to mean

Lippy Signs For 1 Year; Terms Secret

New Contract Calls For No Bonus; Club Gives Coach Dressen Outright Release

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 19.—Leo Durocher was given back his job as playing manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers today, but President Branch Rickey made it clear that the new deal in Flatbush has begun.

In the same press conference at which Durocher's appointment for a fifth season was announced, it was disclosed that Coach Charles (Chuck) Dressen had been given his outright release, that another coach, Fred Fitzsimmons, was being offered the Montreal farm-club managership as a possible first step toward the future leadership of the Dodgers, and that gambling for high stakes by the players would be banned.

Rickey would not disclose the terms given Durocher, but said that he had been signed for one year to a player's contract instead of a manager's. This means, besides the fact that Durocher must play ball this year, that he also can be released on 10 days' notice, both as manager and player.

No Bonus This Time

Durocher's former contract was understood to have called for $23,500 plus bonus provisions. Rickey said his agreement for next year had no bonus clauses but refused to indicate how the salary compared with last year. He explained, however, that Durocher was perfectly satisfied and that terms never were at any time a serious cause for the delay in signing.

What was involved in the long conferences Rickey and Durocher have held this week and previously in St. Louis came out as other points in Brooklyn's program were revealed—club discipline and the release of Dressen, former manager of the Cincinnati Reds and Durocher's first assistant ever since he took charge of the Dodgers in 1939.

Only Two Coaches

Rickey said that hereafter the Dodgers would have only two coaches instead of the three and four they have carried in recent years. He said both he and Durocher wanted John (Red) Corriden to remain as one of the coaches, but that they had agreed Dressen must go because "we have certain coaching plans in mind and this was the move we felt it necessary to make."

He hastened to explain, though, that the change in the coaching staff did not mean that he intended to force Durocher to accept a lieutenant who would be the leading candidate to succeed to the managership if Durocher, married but childless, were called to the Army during the 1943 season.

As a matter of fact, he added, "I feel it preferable to have coaches who do not have a yen to manage. If Leo were to go to the Army I would not have in mind that either of his coaches would be the man to be elevated to the managership. I don't say one of them might not be, but they would not be selected with that purpose in mind."

Then Rickey, who was vice president and general manager of the St. Louis Cardinals before moving to the helm of the Dodgers at the first of this month, explained his policy of selecting managers and the opportunity he was holding forth to Fitzsimmons, the veteran knuckleball pitcher

Brooklyn Club May Also Lose Arky Vaughan

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Nov. 19.—The Brooklyn baseball club, it was learned today, may lose another veteran infielder for the 1943 season—Third Baseman Floyd E. (Arky) Vaughan.

From Potter Valley, where he owns a 400-acre ranch, Vaughn telephoned he was not certain whether he would report to the Dodgers next spring.

Only last week, Dolph Camilli, Brooklyn first base star, asserted he would not play ball in the East next season. Camilli, who ranches 2800 acres some 50 miles north of Vaughan's place, cited the difficulties of transporting five small children and maintaining them in Brooklyn as some of the reasons for his decision not to report.

Vaughan, who joined Brooklyn last year after ten years with the Pittsburgh Pirates, said he had made no decision as to 1943 plans but his conversation indicated he seriously was considering the idea of remaining home.

"I haven't made up my mind," he said, adding "It is hard to run a ranch nowadays because of the help problem. You can't get anyone to work on a ranch. And I may buy 1100 acres more, to get into cattle raising. I have an Eastern transportation problem also with my three children and I wouldn't want to leave the family here while I played baseball."

Vaughan indicated he would make no decision until early next year. The 30-year-old "veteran," who hit around .280 last season, thinks he has quite a bit of major league ball left in him.

Plan to Make Horse Meat Gets Response From 'A Sucker'

'Old Horse Player' Kicks in With Starters For Mr. Gianni's Plant; Favors Idea

By the Associated Press

Mr. A. Gianni
Los Angeles.
Dear Mister Gianni:

I see by the papers how you're gonna build a plant to make horse meat and how the Health Dept. says it is okay—there is no law against it. I just want you should know me and the boys is all in favor of such an idea too.

And if you want Mister Gianni we'll be glad to give you free gratis a few names for starters. There's one for instance that ran in the fourth at Rockingham the other day. That is I guess he ran. Anyhow he finished. He finished last.

I had my last two fins riding with him Mister Gianni but I'd be very happy to put the touch on a pal for another buck to spend for a hunk of rump roast just so long as I was sure his hindquarters wouldn't be packing any more of my folding money along just for the ride.

The papers say you say there are thousands of people here who have eaten horse meat. I don't know about thousands Mister Gianni but I'm sure one of 'em. I ate it for two weeks after Bowie closed last year. It ain't the best but I'm still walking around.

And me and the boys got to talking about the lend-lease angle too. This all fits in with all that beef we're shipping to England and other places. Because a lot of these horses I could give you a list of is descendants of nags that's been shipped over here from England and other places in Europe and if you ask me they're still descending.

There's just one more thing. I want you to be sure you label your horse meat with the horse's name. Me and the boys would like to know when we got a cut of that Rockingham nag for instance. It'd be the first cut we ever got often him. And I don't care what price you ask for the stuff. I figure most of them nags has been costing me from ten bucks a pound up heretofore.

Gratefully yours,
AN OLD HORSEPLAYER.

Pair of Tackles Shine for Colonials in Preparation for G. U.

Hurley, Rosa Turn In Good Defense Work

G. W. U. Backfield Clicks in Practice At Park; Students Get 'Hep' Over Tilt

Hoping to familiarize his team with the site of battle just a little more, despite the fact it has already played five games there, Coach Johnny Baker yesterday led his hard-pressed Colonials into Griffith Stadium for their final heavy workout before tomorrow's big home-town squabble with Georgetown.

The result seemed to be excellent. The first team showed more spirit than it has all year, clicking off plays with surprising timing. Reserves did a lot of "putting out," too, easing Baker's worries somewhat on that point.

Of particular interest to Baker was the defensive work of his two huge tackles, Maurice Hurley and Dan Rosa, who were getting back into action after several weeks on the ill list. Neither of the 200-pounders was scheduled to start, but both can now be depended on to fill in whenever needed.

The Colonial starting backfield showed it is ready to furnish the higly favored Hoyas a heap of trouble. With Pete Labukas calling the signals, Jimmy Graham and Frank Seno had a field day through the reserve line and Paul Weber attached himself to several of Graham's passes for long gains.

Interest High

Student interest, always notable at both institutions as game-time approaches, appeared to be reaching the feverish stage at George Washington.

Nick Lakas, head Colonial cheer leader, is completing plans for a huge student rally tonight behind G. W.'s Hall of Government. The affair is scheduled to get under way at 9 o'clock.

As a part of thet program, cheer leaders are planning the traditional burning of a Hoya in effigy and also a mock trial which will attempt to prove that the Hilltoppers are guilty of heaping extreme disgrace upon G. W. for the past three years.

Speakers at the occasion will include Kim Vought, president of the student body; John R. Busick, director of athletics; presidents of Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils; and Cocapts. Ellis Hall and Don Seibert and other players on the Colonial football squad. Lakas is urging everyone to brings scraps of lumber for the bonfire.

Tomorrow night, as an indication of the good relations between these rival institutions, a joint G. W.-Georgetown dance will be held in the Colonial gymnasium to celebrate the outcome of the contest. Honored guests at the affair will include members and coaches of both football teams. Pat Orr, social chairman of the G. W. student council, is in charge of arrangements.

Sorce, Hoya Tackle, Is Unable to Play

While G. W. was gloating over the return of two tackles, Georgetown was being informed that it could not use one who is large enough to take the place of two. Ross Sorce, 240-pounder, was checked over by a doctor and his cracked jaw found too damaged to allow his use.

Sorce's place will be taken by either Stan Joworowski or Ollie Oja, with Freshman John Siano a possibility to see some action. The trio is not the smallest in the world but it will lack considerable in the weight Sorce furnished.

The Hoyas went through a rigorous workout at the Hilltop and Coach Jack Hagerty continued to impress on his charges the danger of over-confidence. In some quarters yesterday G. U. was being rated a 3-1 choice. Several offers of 13 points were made by confident Hilltop enthusiasts.

Clever Running Accounts for a Wilson Gain

Strong Bisons Make Debut On Uline Ice

The ranking No. 1 box office attraction of the American Hockey League invades Uline Arena tomorrow night when Eddie Shore's powerhouse Buffalo Bisons, Western Division leader with seven victories and three defeats, make their 1942-43 debut locally against the Washington Lions at 8:30 o'clock.

The Bisons, loaded down with outstanding talent, will introduce a brand new sensation in 17-year-old Gordie Bell, miracle man goalie, who recently shut out the Cleveland Barons, 1 to 0, and who has turned in several other fine performances.

Buffalo, considered by many the strongest combination in the American League, also will feature a valuable newcomer in Keith Allen, strong skating 190-pound defense man, who was one of the key men of Redvers Mackenzie's Washington Eagles last season.

Shore will bring to Washington a power-laden line-up that includes Max Kaminsky and Whitey Rimstad, centers; Bill Summerhill, Fred Hunt and Bob Dill, right wingmen; Allen, defense, and Bell, goalie.

The Lions, charged with four consecutive losses, will shake up two of their lines and Coach Mantha, inactive as a player since early season, probably will return to action to bolster the defense.

Georgetown Boys Boxers Triumph

Ringmen of the Georgetown branch of the Washington Boys Club won their opening bouts of the season last night by defeating the Hillcrest Club, 6 to 1. In the feature attraction, Jim Binns of Georgetown scored a decision over Dodo Coakley in the 105-pound class. Other results:

92-pound class—Arthur Rodell (G) defeated James Ferguson; Joe Collins (G) defeated Steve Denunguie.

105-pound class—Jim Binns (G) defeated Dodo Coakley.

W. and L. Will Present A Cosmopolitan Team

Maryland will face a truly cosmopolitan football team when it entertains Washington and Lee at College Park tomorrow at 2:30 in its colorful homecoming game.

Fourteen States and the District of Columbia are represented in the squad of 37, with only eight of the Generals being from Old Dominion. Connecticut is next in line with four, three each come from Kentucky, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Maryland, there are two each from Massachusetts and Tennessee and lone representatives hail from the Capital City, North Carolina, New York, Illinois, Ohio and Rhode Island.

Bill McKelway, a sophomore end who prepped at Central High, is the lone member of the squad from the District. Guard Lud Michaux and Halfbacks Harry Baugher and Dick Working from Baltimore are the next closest to home talent. Baugher and Working play major roles in the Generals' attack.

It will be the seventeenth game between the Southern Conference rivals, with Maryland holding a 9-5 edge with two ties; it will mark the fiftieth anniversary of football at College Park, the thirtieth anniversary of the return of President Curly Byrd to his alma mater, and there will be an elaborate program of a military nature for the old grads dedicated to the boys in the service.

The Old Liners, who will be seeking their seventh win in nine starts this season, will be the favorites, but this has Coach Clark Shaughnessy worried. "He has noted with dismay and chagrin that his charges are not taking the game seriously enough to suit him and he fears they may be "riding for a fall."

There also is a possibility that Maryland will be without the services of Joe Hoopengardner, understudy at quarterback to Tommy Mont, and Halfback George Barnes. "Hoopy" is nursing a slightly spiked leg and Barnes has been suffering from a sore throat.

Shaughnessy has drilled his team hard, despite the players' apathy, and has changed his attack materially. He will polish off the defense at today's session.

Pro Dodgers In Dire Need, Coach to Play

The Brooklyn Dodgers have been losing men so fast to the services and by injuries that Mike Nixon, Mike Getto's assistant coach, was signed to a player contract yesterday and will work as a blocking back against the Redskins here Sunday . . . Nixon was a two-time All-American with Pittsburgh as Mike Nicksick, and played two years with the Pittsburgh Steelers . . . Nixon will replace the injured Wendell Butcher.

The Redskin office has less than 5000 seats remaining for Sunday, the last home game of the season before the play-off December 13 . . . The record home attendance of the season, 35,425 for the Card game, will be surpassed by several hundred . . . Since moving to Washington the Redskins hold a 7-4 edge in the Brooklyn series . . . Sammy Baugh and Bob Masterson made the Sporting News All-Star team of the week last week. Baugh has now missed just one week, while Don Hutson has been a choice each week.

Pro Grid Commissioner Elmer Layden officiated at a routine meeting here yesterday, making preliminary preparations for the play-off, which is not yet definite but will probably be assured Sunday afternoon about 5 o'clock . . . Dutch Bergman will have a scout's nightmare on Sunday in the Chicago Bears-Detroit Lions game, as he must scout both clubs.

Wilson Routs Devitt, 34-6, In Last Game

Phil Funk and Bob Crowell, an unstoppable pair of runners, yesterday led Woodrow Wilson High eleven to a 34-6 rout over Devitt Prep on the winners' field. Each scored twice as the Tigers added to their total in each period.

The game ended Wilson's regular season, though it may still compete in two more contests before hanging up its gear. The first would be a playoff with Central for the western division, interhigh title if Central is beaten by Western today. The second would be the intersection championship game with Tech if the Tigers survive their playoff with Central.

Funk, a converted end, got in the first licks yesterday. He scored the victors' first two touchdowns against a Devitt club which boasted only five reserves.

Fumble Hurts

On the first play from scrimmage Devitt's Wakeman Allen fumbled on the 1-yard stripe, Tackle Hodson fell on the ball and it took Funk one drive at the line to score. Bill Tanney then kicked the first of three placements.

After Devitt had been stopped on Wilson's 2-yard line, Funk went over again in the second period. Crowell set up the score when he intercepted Allen's pass on the 30 and moved back to Devitt's 19. Three plays later the Tigers were on the 3, from which point Funk drove into scoring territory.

First-half scoring was closed out a few seconds later when Monk Barbee dropped a 27-yard aerial in the arms of Buddy Brewton and the latter stepped 3 yards over the line.

Crowell Scores

Crowell made his pair of touchdowns the spectacular way. In the third stanza he capped a short drive with a 28-yard sprint into the end zone. In the fourth he broke around left end and raced 48 yards through the tiring Devitt secondary. Devitt's only retaliation was a 65-yard drive against the Tiger second team in the final period. Allen carried the ball over from 1 yard out.

Slaughter Granted Divorce in St. Louis

St. Louis, Nov. 19 (AP).—Enos Slaughter, star outfielder for the St. Louis Cardinals, and a 1942 World Series hero, today was granted a divorce from his wife, Hughlo Slaughter, by Circuit Judge James E. McLaughlin. The baseball player charged desertion.

It was indicated Slaughter would make an out-of-court cash settlement.

Slaughter enlisted as an Army aviation cadet last August and said today he still waiting to be called to duty.

Western Blocks Title Hopes of Vikings Today

A last but perfect chance to make itself felt in the public school football series, after its worst season in years, will be enjoyed by Western High eleven today when it takes on Central in the feature of the final Friday double bill. Starting time will be 3:45.

The game means nothing to Western. Nothing, that is, except a chance to knock off the western division leader and one of the Red Raiders' bitterest foes. A victory would help the Raiders not at all in the league standings.

To Central the clash will make the difference between uncontested first place in its division, clinching a playoff with Tech for the interhigh championship, and a very messy argument with Wilson over the west section title.

Western Fullback Missing

Western goes into its final effort without the services of Welles Fendrick, regular fullback who is out with a cold, but with a fine replacement for him. He is George Neam, a transplanted guard who celebrated his shift recently by scoring three touchdowns in one game.

With the return to shape of Maurice Horton the Vikings have no injuries to worry about. All Coach John Jankowski must bother about is the attitude of his players, which he fears has been a little too light-hearted recently.

In the other half of the final day's interhigh schedule at the same time, Eastern takes on Roosevelt at Lincoln Park. The game will have nothing to do with the championship playoff.

An Interstate Academic Conference game which may decide the championship will find St. Albans, with a six-game winning streak behind it, traveling to Hagerstown to face a strong St. James eleven tomorrow. The hosts have lost only one league game, an 8-6 margin in their opener, and can be depended on to put up a stiff argument in both teams' last outing. The Hagerstown team is captained by Fred Allen, of Laurel, Md., at an end position.

Also in the I. A. C. today will be a meeting of Landon and St. Andrews, of Middleton, Del., on the local field. Georgetown Prep will play host to Loyola of Baltimore, and the ancient Episcopal-Woodberry Forest series will be renewed in Orange, Va., in the only other action involving local teams.

Andy Farkas Is Appointed Head Coach at St. John's High

'Skins' Star Will Succeed Augusterfer

New Mentor to Take Over With Basketball Team; Realizes Dream Of High School Days

Andy Farkas, fullback of the Washington Redskins, will take over the St. John's High coaching job left vacant by Gene Augusterfer's enlistment in the Navy, it was announced last night by Brother Leo, director of athletics at the Vermont Avenue school.

Farkas will assume his new duties Monday, it was revealed, starting off with the Johnnie basketball team. A squad meeting will be called during which Augusterfer, veteran and popular mentor, will formally introduce cagemen to their new coach.

In announcing the signing of Farkas, Brother Leo expressed his pleasure with the rugged former Detroit University star's forceful and pleasant attitude.

"He should be a fine replacement for Gus," Brother Leo said," what with almost the same sort of personality. We confidently hope he will keep our teams up there at the top as Gus has done."

For Farkas acquisition of the job fulfilled a lifelong ambition.

"Ever since I handled the Detroit High junior varsity team in my sophomore year at Detroit U. I've wanted to handle a high school team. If hard work will make any difference you can bet St. John's basketball team will be as good as ever this year."

Actually Farkas has had little experience at the court game. In college he was forced to forego the sport in order to catch up with his studies after football. But during his scholastic days the Redskins' power runner played with a Monroe, Mich., grammar school five, as an amateur in Toledo and during his senior year at Detroit High.

Dear Al:

James Collins, exercise employe for Preston M. Burch, suffered cuts about the head and body injuries when a horse he was breezing was caught in a jam turning into the homestretch during workouts. Collins, who hails from New York, was taken to a Washington hospital. Trainer Max Hirsch brought Ben Grey, Salto, Equipped and Richmond from New York. Salto is a candidate for the $10,000 James F. O'Hara and Gadsden D. Bryan Memorial on November 28, closing day of Maryland's 1942 season. Trainer B. Frank Christmas, who had several horses in care of M. Dupuy, brought in Here Goes, Key Ring, Glaustauder, Cacodemon, Belay, Victim, Demonstrator, Boliver, Chief Mate, Blue Lily, Chain Miss, Cynic Miss, Snooks Winters and Byrd Boy. G. Ray Bryson will ship 16 horses today from Pimlico to Healeah Park, Fla. Trainer Phil Reuter has arranged to ship 12 horses on Saturday from here to Tropical Park, Fla. Part of the shipment are horses trained by M. E. Costello. Jockey Danny Scocca, who was injured during the Pimlico session, was a visitor. He says he will resume riding here next week. Jockey Charlie Rollins, who is confined to Room 943, University Hospital in Baltimore, is anxious to hear from his friends. Rollins underwent an appendectory last Saturday. Jockey Eddie DeCamillis, Room 530, Union Memorial Hospital in Baltimore, is improving daily. He suffered a broken leg during an accident at Laurel. Wagering last Wednesday hit a new high for this session. The total was $377,977, which exceeded the wagering for the fifth day of last fall's meeting. Calculators R. C. Patterson and R. J. (Bob) Batterden. Charlie Lucas, who handles the money room, Leo C. Blankenship, who handicaps the daily program and Sam Doyle all leave tomorrow night for the Fair Grounds, New Orleans. Director of Wagering J. Donald Hay reports that he has his entire crew selected for the 18 days racing beginning November 30 at Charles Town, W. Va. Hay, in addition to handling wagering here and at Charles Town, also is in charge at Cumberland, Marlboro and Hagerstown. Dion K. Kerr has been named trainer of Mrs. T. C. Rompol's Park Bench and Grey Squire. Jockey F. Remerscheid has decided to go to the Charles Town, W. Va., meeting when this session ends, instead of vacationing at his home. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—ALPINE KING could be the right one in the day's opener. Seems capable of handling the 115-pound assignment. The Lyon-Martin entry of GALLANT MOWLEE and MACANT deserve respect. NELLIE MOWLEE is a possibility.

Second race—FOGOSO will appreciate the soft track here and will be hard to whip in this company. LIGHT OF MORN has done about everything asked and is dangerous. WOODVALE LASS for the show end.

Third race—SON OF HEELS ran ran a fair race here the other day. Could be the right one in a rather open affair. BATTLE FLAME and CYNIC MISS to fill out the money bracket.

Fourth race — TANGELO was messed about last out and then closed fastest of all. With better racing luck this one may take it all. CHERRY T can't be as bad as that last. MY MALLIE to take care of the others.

Fifth race—The Hall-Brown entry of REX and GLORYLAND includes two winners of their last appearances. I prefer the first named. LITTLE HOOPS has speed but may be bothered by the inside post position. SEVENTEEN GUNS for the show end.

Sixth race—WHEAT likes this track and this route. Needs only the right ride. ROSCOE K is dangerous off that recent victory. ANONYMOUS won but was disqualified last out and is a threat.

Seventh race—NATOMAS is the speed of this party and I'm going to be there. BEN GAY is a good one from New York. JOHNNIE J. may surprise.

Eighth race—ROUGH PASS and RODIN are a tight fit in this distance affair. I prefer them in the order named. CHALDON HEATH to take care of the minor money.

Ninth race—CACODEMON has a bit of class that might be the edge in an open race of this kind. I'm going to string along ROYAL BUSINESS is a threat. MICHIGAN SUN will be right there if in action.

Best bet—Tangelo.

Navy Faces Task Preparing 'Guest' List for Service Game

Annapolis Office Can Hold Only Fans Who Reside Within 20 Miles of Academy

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 19.—With only one day remaining for persons living within 10 miles of Annapolis to apply for Army-Navy football-game tickets, Navy Athletic Association officials began today to prepare to select their "guests" for the deflated interservice classic scheduled here November 28.

After tomorrow night's deadline, they expect to be occupied until the middle of next week certifying each applicant and mailing out the precious pasteboards. And anybody whose application reaches the Naval Academy after the deadline won't see the classic, because there'll be no box-office sale the day of the game.

Increasing demands for applications caused the association to reopen its downtown Annapolis office today to facilitate handling last-minute requests.

Because persons living outside the 10-mile limit around Annapolis won't be eligible to attend, it is believed the crowd will not exceed 20,000 when the service academies resume their 43-year-old pigskin rivalry at little Thompson Stadium next week.

Capacity Is 18,000

The stadium's normal capacity is 18,000 but if the ticket applications warrant ,temporary bleachers to accommodate an additional 7000 persons can be installed. Navy athletic officials, refraining from any pregame attendance estimates, have reported that the general public has "played ball" with them to the extent that few embarrassing situations have arisen.

Annapolitans also are doing everything possible to make the contest a success under the curtailed wartime conditions. Unaccustomed to a $4.40 "top" for local Navy games, they nevertheless have accepted the challenge to do their bit to fill the stadium and few households from the sparsely populated surrounding area will be unrepresented on the big day.

Several merchants already have announced their stores will be closed November 28 and today Walter H. Myers, Chamber of Commerce president, urged all stores to follow suit. It also was reported that Mayor William U. McCready would issue a proclamation early next week making "Army-Navy Day" a municipal holiday.

Under President Roosevelt's directive, Naval Academy authorities have been ordered to do nothing out of the way to promote a football extravaganza, although Army-Navy gridiron tussles of the past have been cloaked in pomp and splendor.

Paul Komar Slated to Box Clint Conway

Following the announcement yesterday that the District Boxing Commission had approved a 10-round match between Joe Torres, the Puerto Rican, and Gene Johnson, New York lightweight, Promoter Turner in his daily communication allowed as how he had booked two former simon-pure champions—Paul (Buddy) Komar, of McKeesport, Pa., and Clint Conway, Harlem colored heavyweight—for a special six-round match.

Ordinarily, the Conway-Komar match would be considered a top bout in any man's land, but in Monday's case the promoter finds himself with Torres against Johnson in a feature 10, which formerly was booked for eight, and Danny Petro, the Southeast southpaw, meeting Billy Reed of Indianapolis in a return grudge match over the eight-round route.

What makes the Conway-Komar bout interesting is the fact that Conway last winter won the Eastern Golden Gloves lightheavyweight title in New York, while in Boston Komar annexed the National A. A. U. heavyweight championship.

Both Komar and Conway have fought in Washington. The Harlem dusky battler flattened Horace Jones in one round last summer at the ball park, while Komar in appearances at Turner's Arena stopped Tod Cole and Powerhouse Johnson.

Former British Champ Dies 'Accidental Death'

Johannesburg, Union of South Africa, Nov. 19 (AP)—Jack Foord, former heavyweight boxing champion of the British Empire, who once lost to Max Baer in London, died an "accidental death" on September 28 it was decided at an inquest today. Johannesburg was his home.

The report said that Foord died of a "bullet wound in the head when a revolver which he was handling was discharged, probably accidentally."

Corpl. Knox Has Plenty of Talent to Keep Him Busy

Knox Refuses Out-of-Town Ring Matches

Corpl. Buddy Knox, popular fighting soldier who boxes Buddy Walker, hard-hitting Columbus (Ohio) Negro, in the 10-round main event of the Liberty Athletic Club's boxing shown at Uline Arena Tuesday night, last night announced that he has rejected several offers for bouts elsewhere.

Since Knox hit the comeback trail by scoring handily over Georgie Parks at Uline's Arena recently, he has been in receipt of bids to box Turkey Thompson on the Pacific Coast, Sheldon Bell in Dayton, Ohio, and any one of several outstanding heavies in Philadelphia, but has refused all overtures.

Jack Laken, Dayton matchmaker, was in Washington last night in an effort to sign Knox for a bout with Bell, but Knox indicated that he intended casting his lot with Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn.

"If I can get over Walker and land Jimmy Bivins as an opponent here I'll stick with Washington," he said last night. "I think this is a great boxing town, and I can help build it into a greater one.

"Everything, of course, hinges around my bout with Walker Tuesday. Buddy was good enough to box me to a draw a year ago and I understand he's improved since. That would make him a hard boy to stop."

Walker, meanwhile, is working out daily in Columbus, and is completely sold on his chances of taking Corporal Knox.

Willie Pep Choice Tonight Over Wright

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 19.—Willie Pep, a fast little fighter out of Connecticut, who operates somewhat on the theory of a widmill in a gale, steps up in Madison Square Garden tomorrow night to try to answer the ring's $64 question: "How long can ancient Chalky Wright keep going?"

Willie and the Chalk fight it out over the 15-round route for Chalky's world featherweight championship, which is not to be confused with the featherweight championship owned by Pittsburgh Jackie Wilson. Wright's title is recognized by the New York State Athletic Commission, and Wilson has the National Boxing Association's blessing.

Pep has skyrocketed along so successfully in piling up his all-victorious string of 53 fights in a row that his outing against the aging Los Angeles Negro is going to turn out to be the high financial spot of this indor nose-mashing season. Aided and abetted by some 8000 to 10,000 Connecticut rooters who are coming along to see their hero in action, the turnout for this tussle may hit the 18,000 mark and Promoter Mike Jacobs won't feel hurt a bit if the gate receipts ring his cash registers more than $50,000 worth.

Pep—whose real name is Papaleo—punches so fast and so frequently once the referee tells the boys to "come out fighting," that he's been installed a 5 to 8 favorite to take the crown away from the Chalk.

Michigan, Ohio State Lines in Spotlight

By the Associated Press

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 19.—Michigan's "seven oak posts" and Ohio State's stellar line of "forgotten men" may steal the show from the teams' fleet wingbacks in the Nation's top gridiron attraction here Saturday.

With the Western Conference championship hopes of both teams riding on the outcome, the line play will be the key factor in deciding the 60-minute battle before a sell-out crowd of about 80,000.

Michigan's line of Center Mervin Pregulman, Guards Bob Kolesar and Julius Franks, Tackles Al Wistert and Bill Pritula—Pritula who doubles at center—and ends Phil Sharpe and Elmer Madar got the "oak post" reputation because few substitutes are used. The No. 1 substitute, Walt Freihofer, plays either guard.

A Michigan scout, Ernie McCoy, tabbed the Bucks' linemen—Center Bill Vickroy, Guards Lin Houston and Hal Dean, Tackles Charles Csuri, an all-America candidate, and William Willis and Ends Bob Shaw and Don Steinberg—as the "forgotten men" because of Ohio's fullback Gene Fekete and Halfback Paul Sarringhaus, the conference's leading scorers.

The Wolverine line play also has been overshadowed by the brilliant running and passing of Tom Kuzma, a worthy halfback successor to "Terrible" Tommy Harmon.

With Saturday's game being labeled as a football extravaganza of speed and power, the two lines will have their hands full trying to stop speedy, deceptive plays cooked up by Michigan's wily Fritz Crisler, who hasn't lost to an Ohio team in four years, and Ohio's Paul Brown, who piloted an underdog to a 20-all tie with the Wolves in 1941.

Statistics show little to choose between the forward walls. In eight games, Michigan opponents have gained an average of only 101.4 yards a game by rushing and Ohio opponents 102.4.

OUT HUNTING ... with Jack Bell

"Down will help to down our enemies," is the slogan adopted by the Izaak Walton League of America in its nation-wide campaign to salvage the body feathers and down from both wild killed and domestic ducks and geese for use in providing down linings for aviators suits and other cold weather garments for our armed forces.

JACK BELL

The league's several hundred chapters from coast to coast, are now cooperating in this national salvage campaign. They are appealing to all wildfowlers, citizens and particularly to nearby farmers, butchers and housewives to salvage the body feathers from all domestic ducks and geese as well as those from wild birds.

A shortage of feathers for the down linings of garments for our armed forces has existed for several months. On February 24 last, the WPB issued an order which froze all duck and goose feathers and placed a priority on this type of feathers for use by the Army and Navy.

Ducks Unlimited also urges sportsmen to save all down and small body feathers of their ducks and geese bagged during the hunting season.

Government contractors declare that ordinary wild waterfowl down, usually thrown away, is an excellent substitute for domestic duck and goose down but legally unobtainable except through cooperation of sportsmen during the open hunting season.

It is estimated that the seasonal bag of wild ducks and geese would provide enough down and feathers for 300,000 aviators pants and parkas and more than 150,000 sleeping bags or 500,000 sub-zero down jackets for service men and civilians alike.

Regardless of who does the job, or whether or not the feathers are sent to Izaak Walton League or Ducks Unlimited, the continuous job of salvaging these feathers should be done. It is a primary war salvage necessity. The main thing is to get them into commercial channels, and these two nationally known conservation organizations lend their facilities in order to expedite this end.

Address shipments to—Ducks Unlimited, 83 Columbia Street, Seattle, Washington; or to—Izaak Walton League—Feathers, 3227 South Shields Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

It is recommended that shipments be made in either used flour, sugar or burlap bags—in minimum shipments of 5 pounds. Shipments containing any feathers from wild killed birds—must have both consignee and consignor's name and address clearly indicated.

When shipping "used" feathers the shipping label should be plainly marked "Used Feathers."

The salvage of feathers from wildfowl killed by sportsmen is very important and is one way of answering critics who condemn them for hunting and wasting ammunition.

(Note: Feathers from upland game birds, chickens, etc., are not used for down lined garments.)

New Englanders are said to be born traders, and Warden Frank Phillips of Rangely, Maine, has done his bit to prove it.

He recently located a quart of shelled becehnuts in the hollow center of a tree he was cutting down, cached there by a foresighted squirrel. Frank loves beechnuts, but he could not take the rations from a squirrel.

3 Kaiser Shipyards Accused by NLRB

Closed Shop Contracts With A. F. L. Called Violation of Wagner Act

The National Labor Relations Board yesterday overrode protests that it was interfering with war production and accused three West Coast shipyards operated by Henry J. Kaiser of violating the Wagner Act by entering into illegal closed-shop contracts with the American Federation of Labor.

The NLRB complaint was issued in the face of objections from officials of the United States Maritime Commission, who contended that the resultant proceedings would have an adverse affect on production in the yards, it was learned.

Announcing that a public hearing would be held on the complaint in Portland, Oreg., on December 14, NLRB Chairman H. A. Millis issued an unprecedented public statement which asserted that similar hearings "have not had the effect of interfering with war production."

Other Agreements Cited

"They have been conducted in such manner and at such hours best suited to the convenience of all those interested in maximum and uninterrupted production," Millis said. "We have found that thorough investigations and prompt hearings are even more essential in wartimes; they have the effect of allaying tensions in the plant and quickly resolving any matters which might occasion or contribute to industrial unrest."

The NLRB acted after the C. I. O. Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers accused the yards of engaging in unfair labor practices. The complaint was issued following an NLRB investigation of the C. I. O. charges.

Three Yards Involved

The htre eyards involved are at Vancouver, Wash.; Swan Island, Portland, Oreg., and the Orange Shipbuilding Co., Portland. Unions accused in the complaint include the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. L. and the following A. F. L. craft unions: Boilermakers, operating engineers, electrical workers, hod carriers, machinists, blacksmiths, molders, pattern-makers, metal polishers, plumbers, sheet metal workers, carpenters and painters.

The complaint charged that Kaiser signed closed shop contracts with the A. F. L., agreeing to hire only A. F. L. members last spring when his Swan Island yard had no employes, his Vancouver yard had 191 employes, and his Oregon Shipbuilding yard had 66 employes.

The contracts were signed, according to the complaint, at a time when the shipbuilder knew that he would have to employ at least 10,000 employes in each of his yards within six months.

The charges also accused Kaiser of "discriminatorily" discharging 701 workers for not belonging to the A. F. L., and of refusing to hire persons who did not hold A. F. L. work permit cards.

The controversy may also be considered as a repercussion of the present bitter fight involving the C. I. O. union and the group of A. F. L. metal trade crafts.

Contract Called Illegal

"Under the National Labor Relations Act," Millis said, "contracts making membership in a union a condition of employment are illegal unless they are entered into by a union which has been designated by at least a majority of employes as their bargaining agent."

The complaint accused Kaiser of engaging in "unfair labor practices by rendering aid and assistance to the A. F. of L. unions in recruiting and maintaining membership among the employes."

If the NLRB upholds the complaint it would probably order the contracts dissestablished and require the company to conform to certain rules during an interim period which might be followed by an election to determine whether Kaiser employes desire to be represented by the A. F. of L., C. I. O. or no union for collective bargaining purposes.

Plane Crash Kills Dorman In Florida

Aviation Cadet Barclay Nelson Dorman, 27, son of Dr. and Mrs. Horatio N. Dorman, 4201 Fordham Road Northwest, was one of nine men killed in an airplane accident over Pensacola Bay, Fla., Wednesday, it was announced yesterday.

DORMAN

The cause of the collision was undetermined, but officials said the planes probably collided near the water during landing or take-off operations.

Both aircraft were attached to a patrol squadron of the main station at Pensacola.

Born in Brunswick, Me., Dorman received his early education in Washington, graduating from Western High School in 1933. He attended George Washington University for two years and then transferred to Bates College, Lewiston, Me., receiving his degree of bachelor of science in 1939.

Served Cadillac

Through the sponsorship of the Cadillac Co. of Washington, he received a two-year course at the General Motors Institute at Flint, Mich. He then took up automobile distribution with the Cadillac Co. of Washington, where he remained until he enlisted in the Air Corps.

He entered the United States Naval Air Station at Pensacola on August 7, 1942, after pre-flight training at the Naval School at Anacostia.

Besides his parents, he is survived by three brothers, Hamilton P. Dorman, United States Naval Medical Reserve, now attending the Uniersity of Maryland Medical School, Baltimore, Md.; Ensign Wayne E. Dorman, United States Naval Mine Warfare School, Yorktown, Va., and Parker S. Dorman, United States Naval Reserve, Amherst College, Amherst, Mass.

Injured Fliers Arrive From Mountaintop

By the Associated Press

Costilla, N. M., Nov. 19.—The first group of injured Army airmen arrived at 7:30 o'clock tonight after an arduous pack trip from above timberline on towering Costilla Peak, where their four-engine bomber crashed early Monday, killing 1 flier and injuring 9.

Costilla informants did not know the identity or the number of the men brought in. They were to be taken to Taos, 50 miles to the south.

The very seriously injured had not been brought in, these sources said, but were expected later tonight.

One of the crew, identified only as a Lieutenant Godnick, was reported to have been killed in the crash.

Others Killed

Listed as dead aboard one of the planes were:

Ensign Frederick W. Greeve, 3d, United States Naval Reserve, pilot instructor, West Lafayette, Ind.

Corporal Ernest W. Tull, R. A. F. student, Slough, Buckinghamshire, England.

William J. White, also of the R. A. F., Tipton, Staffordshire, England.

Walter R. Porter, aviation machinists' mate, Detroit, Mich.

In the second plane those killed, in addition to Dorman, were listed as:

Ensign Robert S. Geiger, U. S. N. R., pilot instructor, Green Cove Springs, Fla.

Johnnie C. Hopkins, seaman second class, U. S. N. R., Vienna, Mo.

Hopkin's body has not yet been recovered from the bay.

The two British airmen will be buried in Fort Barrancas National Cemetery here.

Jury Is Dismissed In Navy Bribe Case

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 19, (AP).—A jury in Federal District Court was excused late yesterday after reporting it was unable to reach a verdict in the trial of Hilton Gray Waller, 25-year-old pie salesman, charged with bribery in connection with transactions with the United States Navy.

Waller admitted that he had made two payments to a Navy enlisted man "in appreciation for pastry orders received," but denied that there was any intention on his part to bribe the man.

Justice Dept. Gets Data on Housing Job

By Edward Ryan

Post Staff Writer

Chairman Truman of the Senate's Defense Investigating Committee announced late yesterday that he had given the Justice Department records of alleged fraud in the contractors fees paid for a 700-unit Government housing project at Winfield Park, N. J.

Truman's announcement came at the close of a sharply-worded two-hour quiz of Clifford F. MacEvoy, general contractor for the housing project, in which the builder admitted that his own relatives had been hired on the job, and as contractor he had bought and rented supplies from other firms which he controlled, at prices which he set.

The testimony led Senator Truman (Democrat) of Missouri to tell MacEvoy "it's perfectly apparent" the housing contract had been a means for using "milking" companies to gain a profit for himself.

"Didn't Furnish a Thing"

"It's perfectly apparent to me," declared Truman, "that you didn't furnish a thing except a sales set-up to deal with the Government at a profit to yourself.

"That's a mighty bad practice, and if that's the prevailing set-up with Government contractors, we're going to have to rake the whole thing over," Truman said.

Under questioning by Committee Counsel Hugh Fulton, MacEvoy admitted that the Park Avenue Storage Co., which he described as a trust whose income went to his wife and of which he and his wife were trustees, had rented equipment and sold some lumber for the housing project.

"Who set the price?" asked Fulton.

"I think probably I did," replied MacEvoy, but added that he had cleared the arrangement with the Government's project engineer.

Fulton asked about another firm, Rockledge, Inc., and MacEvoy said, "We own it."

Bulldozers $700 a Month

Did that company get any money out of this contract?" asked Fulton.

"Yes," said MacEvoy, "it rented equipment which it went out and bought."

"It rented bulldozers for $700 a month," Fulton continued, "and you got the equipment back and you're renting it to the Government on other projects?"

MacEvoy agreed.

"Have you ever checked up to see if you have got back about what you paid for the equipment?" asked Fulton.

MacEvoy replied "that could easily be so."

At another point Fulton asked whose services MacEvoy had furnished the Government for the $80,000 contract fee.

"I furnished my own," said MacEvoy, "Maybe I just furnished my own."

"Did you furnish your brother Warren MacEvoy," demanded Fulton.

"He was out in charge of construction," said MacEvoy. "He got $120 a week when he was worth $250."

$35 Weekly Raise

Under further questioning, Fulton brought out that MacEvoy's secretary, Mildred Wakefield, had gone on the Government payroll as a $75-a-week accountant, when she had previously been getting $40 a week.

"She was a trained accountant, and it was a big job," MacEvoy insisted.

Also hired were John MacEvoy, whom the witness identified as "my brother's boy," to check cutting lists at $30 a week, and the son-in-law of the Government project engineer at a salary of $50 a week.

Of the latter MacEvoy said that the son-in-law had applied for the job, there had been nothing secret about it, but added, "I suppose it might be criticized."

Committee investigators identified the project engineer as A. E. Sankey and said he was still employed in the Government but no longer with housing work.

At another point, Fulton ran through a list of subcontracts totaling nearly $800,000, and charged that the general contractor had sought to create a "false and fraudulant" impression that there had been competitive bidding for the subcontracts, whereas some firms listed as having submitted bids wrote the committee that they had not done so.

MacEvoy declared that as far as he knew every bid listed as having been submitted had in fact been submitted.

Capital Store Sales Up 8% During Week

Washington department store sales in the week ended November 14 were 8 per cent greater than in the same week last year, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday.

Cumulative sales here for the four weeks ended November 14 were 18 per cent above the same 1941 period.

The Fifth District as a whole showed a sales gain of 14 per cent for the week, while the increase for the four-week period was estimated at 18 per cent.

Banks Bear Third of Debt

A Treasury report showed yesterday that more than one-third of the Nation's public debt was being carried by banks last June 30.

Of the total debt figure at that time—nearly 80 billion dollars—the banks held more than 30 billion dollars in United States Government securities.

Remainder was scattered among other investors, according to the report, which listed total assets in all active banks in the United States and possessions on that date as $92,259,991,000.

Wholesale Index Gains

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday its wholesale price index rose 0.4 per cent last week to 100.1 per cent of the 1926 average. The advance was attributed to higher prices for agricultural commodities, largely grains, and the higher excise taxes on tobacco products and alcohol.

The Index for the week ended November 13, 1937, was 83.2. In November, 1929, the index level was 93.5.

Raw Materials Limit Output

The production of war materials by the automotive industry generally has reached the level where the only limiting factor is raw materials, according to Automotive War Production, publication of the Automotive Council for War Production.

The publication says the limits of available raw materials are being approached, "and keeping the volume up gets tougher and tougher."

"Yet," it adds, "still larger total production of completed products is to be obtained in the Nation through closer scheduling and more efficient distribution of steel, copper, aluminum and other critical metals to the producing industries."

Another method to further extend output will be greater implementation of the program of "making more with less," and the development of more alternate materials.

Late Earnings Statements

Anaconda Copper Mining Co. reported for nine months ended September 30 net income of $27,514,668, equal to $3.17 a share on its capital stock. The statement was exclusive of the company's equity in undistributed earnings of subsidiaries not consolidated amounting to $526,175. In the comparable 1941 period net income, excluding the equity in undistributed earnings of subsidiaries not consolidated, amounted to $32,712,617, or $3.77 a share.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and subsidiaries for the 39 weeks ended October 3 reported a net loss of $389,853 after depreciation, provision of $1,050,357 for income taxes, subsidiary preferred dividends and an appropriation of $633,805 for extraordinary studio write-offs and reserves. This compared with a net profit of $644,775, after providing $289,266 for income taxes, or $5.03 a share on 128,170 shares of $ per cent preferred stock, in the like 1941 period.

Keep Private Building Alive, Realtors Urge

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Nov. 19.—Continuation of private building of urgently-needed family dwellings during the war was recommended today in a report to the convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards as a means of meeting the housing shortage.

The report, by the convention's Washington committee, said retaining at least part of the war housing program in private builders' hands was "of the utmost importance both to stabilize our housing situation and to keep alive the machinery of private housing production for the post-war period."

Accomplishments in the field of housing since Pearl Harbor have far surpassed the record established during the First World War, Earle S. Draper, deputy commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration, declared in an address.

In the first 11 months since December 7, he said, private builders have erected 300,000 dwelling units for war workers and now are actively engaged in building another 200,000 units.

Ormond E. Loomis, director of the conversion division of the National Housing Administration's homes use service, said it was apparent new housing built by June, 1943, could not care for all the 1,600,000 new workers expected to be drawn to war production centers. At least 650,000 must find family accommodations through conversion of existing houses, he estimated.

The NHA's conversion program provides for Government leasing and alteration of appropriate properties offered for use of war workers, he said. Under the plan, the NHA will lease such properties for a minimum period of seven years, spend a maximum of $400 a room for remodeling, and recapture its investment by applying one-seventh of the gross rentals to the conversion cost.

Bendix Aviation Sued As Monopoly

Newark, N. J., Nov. 19 (AP).—The Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice filed suit in Federal District Court today charging the Bendix Aviation Corp. of South Bend, Ind., with violating anti-trust and tariff laws through illegal international agreements in the manufacture and sale of aviation equipment.

The suit, filed by Samuel S. Isseks, head of the Anti-Trust Division's New York office, named three individuals as co-defendants and 25 firms and individuals as co-conspirators, the majority of them foreign.

The 55-page complaint contained seven counts charging that the Bendix Corp. conspired to divide world sales territory, exact non-competitive prices, restrict competition and restrain trade in aero-photographic apparatus, rate-of-climb indicators, carburetors, deicers, fuel injection nozzlers, superchargers and "other various aircraft devices."

New York Cotton

New York, Nov. 19 (AP).—Steady selling in the March and May cotton futures developed in the final minutes of today's trading caused prices to close with net losses of 10 to 65 cents a bale.

Early values were confined to a narrow range. One broker was an accredited seller of upwards of 15,000 bales in the later positions.

Best resistance was shown in the nearby months under the leadership of December. This reflected a persistent demand from trade and mill accounts to fix prices against Government textile contracts.

The range of futures follows:

'Capacity Adequate'

N. A. M. Blames Distribution For Alleged Lack of Steel

New York, Nov. 19.—Researchers for the National Association of Manufacturers reported today steel shortages in war production "are due largely to unbalanced distribution of steel products rather than to any inadequacy of overall steel production."

"Statements to the effect that lack of steel obstructs our munitions output are not borne out by the facts," the report concluded.

The survey, made in preparation for the Congress of American Industry of the N. A. M. December 2, the announcement said, had been shown to War Production Board officials prior to substitution of the new "controlled plan" for priorities.

"Due to the haphazard way of issuing priority orders," the report said, "they were inflated to such an extent that they became ineffectual. . . . with the latest centralization of priorities in the hands of WPB it is to be hoped that orderly distribution of steel supplies will be forthcoming . . ."

The United Nations can outproduce the Axis more than 100 per cent, while the United States alone can make "at least 45 per cent more steel than the combined Axis and Axis-dominated countries," the report asserted.

Pointing out the United States steel facilities had been expanded to 89,198,320 tons a year, as of July 1, it said the standing on last January 1 was:

	Tons.
United States	88,570,000
British Empire	20,600,000
Russia	21,800,000
Total	130,970,000
Germany	24,700,000
Italy	3,000,000
Rest of Europe	26,100,000
Japan	7,200,000
Total	61,000,000

In addition, the researchers said, Axis steel capacities were rated at the highest figure ever achieved before the outbreak of the current year.

"It is unlikely that Germany can operate at capacity every iron and steel plant in Europe, because of transportation difficulties, labor shortages and war-inflicted damages," it commented.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Employes of CAA May Get Uniforms

Civil Aeronautics Administration employes soon may be outfitted in uniforms. They're voting whether to go a la military or to remain in mufti. . . . Edgar Jones has quit as director of the D. C. Employment Office. The Employment Service is losing many of its best people. . . . Army Air Forces is moving its Army Flying Safety Air Corps to Winston Salem, N. C. The corps will be located in the same building with the Civil Service Fourth District office. . . . Navy will be the next big agency to cancel Christmas leave for its workers.

War Secretary Stimpson has taken a personal interest in the transfer of 500 employes of the Demobilized Records Section to High Point, N. C. He told his press conference that the employes will be offered the option of staying here or moving. A survey of the living conditions at High Point, he said, will be made and the employes informed of them before they will be asked to make up their minds. . . . War Labor Board is studying its first case involving higher pay rates for Federal workers. War Department is seeking higher salaries for laundry workers in Western war centers. Salaries of these employes aren't fixed by Congress and the department must get the okay of WLB before it can adjust them.

War and Navy officials are in a sweat over the President's order that has cancelled deferments for thousands of their arsenal and Navy yard employes. Scores of these vital employes, it's said, greeted the President's announcement with resignations. However, none has been accepted pending clarification of the order. Meantime, War, Navy and officials in other agencies are preparing to appeal the draft cases of hundreds of their essential employes to the President. The President, obviously, can't pass on the appeals and he'll have to appoint some sort of a board or committee to recommend decisions to him. What the Government's draft policy will be toward its own employes will necessarily be in the hands of such a body.

The truth is that such an organization already is functioning under a recent order from Paul McNutt's Manpower Commission. Surveys had been made and Manpower was fast approaching the time when it could announce a definite policy. Then came the President's order and Manpower had to abruptly call off its plans. Say what you want, the President's order was a slap at McNutt and the way he has handled the manpower problem. His order exempted no one, G-men, skilled workers, scientists, assistant secretaries or a host of other hard-to-replace people.

The Navy still doesn't know which of its bureaus will be moved to the Pentagon. Inquirers are referred to Secretary Knox as no official seems to have the faintest idea who's going to move and when. Knox said the employes would be in the building by December 1 but no one believes that to be possible . . . Employes in Chicago's Employment Service office have purchased an ambulance for the Red Cross. They raised the money by selling their blood at $5 a pint . . . Go to the War Transfer Unit at 801 E Street if you want a transfer under the recent regulations issued by the Manpower Commission. Don't go to Manpower.

Civil Service has launched a drive to get physically handicapped persons jobs in the Federal service. A survey shows that 1300 different positions involving thousands of jobs in Army arsenals and Navy yards can be filled with "efficiency and safety" by the physically handicapped.

"Unnecessary and artificial restrictions on the employment of physically handicapped persons are unreasonable," the commission said, "especially in wartime when there is a critical lack of physically fit manpower in many occupational fields. Placement of physically handicapped can be effected with a minimum lack of efficiency and maximum risk." The survey was made by Dr. Verne K. Harvey and Dr. E. Parker Luongo, medical officers of the commission.

Dorothy Ransom won the October suggestion contest at the War Department and was a runner-up in The Post's Better Government contest. She pointed out that the department's schedule of night shifts is "the source of much employe dissatisfaction and is one of the causes of civilian personnel turnover." "These shifts," she said, "don't take into consideration the human needs of the employes."

Miss Ransom, employed in the employe relations office, suggested that a group representing the department, other Federal agencies and Washington institutions be appointed to work out a better night shift plan. Suggestions are now being received for The Post's November war bond award . . . AFGE President Jim Burns yesterday blasted the Citizens' Emergency Committee for its opposition to the uniform overtime pay bill.

It Comes To Him Who Waits

Wenatchee, Wash.—Bill Watson, 17, failed to return from a deer-hunting expedition. They found Bill, late the next afternoon, seated on a four-point buck. "This animal was just too big for me to handle alone so I sat down to wait for help," explained Bill.

Safety First

Oconomowoc, Wis.—Thanksgiving's still a week away, but—Lawrence Kane was delegated to carve the turkey at a church supper. The knife slipped out of his hand, off the table and into his own leg, resulting in a neat three-inch gash in Kane's calf. Next Thursday, Thanksgiving, he's dining out.

U. S. Leases 1st Home for Warworkers

HOLC Will Ask Bids for Converting Alexandria House Into Apartments

In Alexandria yesterday the Government signed its first lease in the new Nationwide program to convert existing structures into homes for war workers.

The National Housing Agency, through the Home Owners Loan Corporation, has leased a 14-room house at 908-910 Cameron Street, Alexandria, owned by Brig. Gen. Duncan K. Major, jr., U. S. A., and will convert it into six three-room apartments with bath.

Bids for the conversion will be asked soon by the Home Owners Loan Corporation. The dwelling units will be rented by the HOLC to war workers, listed by the Alexandria War Housing Center. Rents will be comparable to similar accommodations in the community and in accordance with OPA rent ceilings.

As the first lease was announced, Frank Bane, assistant NHA administrator in charge of the Homes Use Service, made public the methods used to determine the amount property owners will be paid by the Government.

The rent to be paid owners who lease their houses will be the difference between the rent paid by war workers and the cost to the Government of remodeling, taxes, insurance and other operating costs.

Some 260 applications for conversion have already been received in the Washington metropolitan area, Milton Fischer, NHA regional representative, announced yesterday.

131 Applications Listed

War housing centers in this area have turned in 131 of these applications to the HOLC for consideration.

All leases under this conversion program will run for seven years, or for two years after the end of the war emergency, whichever is longer. It is planned that each conversion job will amortize itself from war worker rentals within the seven-year period.

After the war emergency is over the house, plus the improvements, will be turned back to the owners.

Discussing the lease of General Major's house, which is in the shadow of Christ Church, once attended by George Washington and Robert E. Lee NHA Administrator John B. Blandford, jr., said:

"It is particularly fitting that the first property leased for conversion into living quarters should be offered by an Army officer. "Property owners in all the crowded war centers where war housing centers are operating can mage a distinct contribution to the war effort by leasing their homes and buildings to the Government for the duration.

"At the same time they will be getting revenues which will represent a good business deal."

The conversion program, Blandford said, is designed not only to provide additional housing for war workers where it is impossible to meet the demand through new construction, but to conserve time, critical materials, labor, transportation and money.

In Washington applications for conversion are received at the War Housing Center, located in the United States Information Center on Pennsylvania Avenue.

Applications for apartments within such converted homes are also received at the War Housing Center. The HOLC, however, passes on all applications for the conversions, and manages the property.

Office Building Leased

General Major made his application at the Alexandria War Housing Center, directed by Miss Barbara K. Watkins. This War Housing Center functioned for 20 months as the Homes Registration Office before the conversion program got under way. It was established largely through the efforts of City Manager Carl L. Budwesky of Alexandria. Even though it is now under Federal auspices the city of Alexandria still contributes to it.

The Government signed another lease later yesterday at Mobile, Ala., for an office building to be converted into dormitories for war workers. Mobile, officials said, has one of the most critical housing situations in the country.

The conversion program will utilize under lease only existing buildings near or within reasonable transportation distance of war-production plants. Family dwelling units of whatever number will be provided by the Homes Use Service. Dormitory accommodations will be provided by the Federal Public Housing Authority.

78th Congress To Weigh D.C. Delegate Bill

The District delegate bill will not come before the House during its present session, Representative Paddock (Republican) of Illinois, told the House yesterday, but a duplicate bill will be reintroduced in the 78th Congress under the sponsorship of Washington civic groups.

Paddock, author of the bill to give the District an elected delegate in the House, took the floor to urge that suffrage be restored to Washington—both to give the fundamental right to vote to the city's residents and to move toward eliminating inefficiency in the municipal government system.

"A District delegate bill will come before the 78th Congress with the sponsorship of the people of Washington," Paddock said, "evidenced by a large committee of representative men and women. I hope it will receive favorable consideration. If it passes, Congress will be in a better position to act promptly and wisely on the important affairs of our Nation's Capital City. Its enactment will remove the stigma of total disfranchisement from the citizens of a great city of free Americans. Washington will be back in the Union."

Citizens Favor Bill

Consideration of his bill, which was introduced last summer, has been held up to date by the fact that the Judiciary Committee's crowded docket has prevented hearings on it. And there is little likelihood of any more such controversial legislation coming before the House during the remainder of its session.

Paddock said that he had sent copies of his bill to more than a thousand Washingtonians, including civic and business leaders, and had received a "large number of replies, nearly all of which were favorable to the proposal."

He declared that a District delegate "would be of the greatest assistance in preparing and considering" local bills brought before Congress.

D. C. Problems Need Action

"When we consider the growing importance of Washington's civic affairs and their increasing complexity," he added, "we must realize the difficulty of dealing with them under our present methods. There are many legislative situations calling for immediate action which cannot be satisfactorily handled because of the delay in obtaining sufficient information and in properly transforming it into adequate legislation."

It is practically impossible, he pointed out, for Congressmen to act both as legislative representatives of home districts and efficient city councilmen for Washington.

A portion of his address was given in the form of questions and answers, including:

"Q. Why is Washington's present government necessarily inefficient?

"A. Because it contains more than 60 uncoordinated agencies, with conflicting powers, and without authority to solve many urgent municipal problems."

He declared that delegate elections would pave the way for eventual self-government.

With military ceremony 80 Washington women were sworn in yesterday as members of the WAAC following the regular formal Thursday afternoon guard mount ceremonies at the Ellipse.

The Washington Monument was an impressive background as the recruits raised their hands to take the oath of allegiance, read by Lieut. Julia M. Kerby, WAAC recruiting officer.

Present to see the ceremonies was Mrs. Mark Wayne Clark, wife of Lieutenant General Clark, who said later the WAAC "will be very helpful in releasing men for active duty."

With her was her mother, Mrs. M. A. Doran, and Mrs. Charles C. Clark, mother of the general.

Termed Magnificent

Lieut. Ellen Grayrigge, Washington head of the Auxiliary Territorial Service, British women's army organization which has 32 members in Washington, termed the WAAC organization "magnificent" as she watched the induction.

After retreat was sounded the 80 WAAC's left the field to eat their first Army mess as guests of the White House Military Police.

They were all in civilian clothes yesterday. Some wore hats with feathers and veils, others tailored suits, but short girls and tall girls, plump ones and thin ones, all will be wearing the khaki of the WAAC in the near future, when they get their orders to report to one of the two WAAC training centers.

Bill Redefining Property Tax Exemptions Here Meets With Speedy Approval in House

The House yesterday gave quick approval to the McCarran-Hunter District tax exemption bill, redefining the rights to property tax exemption of educational, charitable and religious institutions.

The bill which was passed, sponsored in the House by Representative Hunter (Democrat) of Ohio, is almost a duplicate of that worked out in the Senate by Senator McCarran, chairman of that chamber's District Committee.

The only difference between the two measures is that the House committee added the Lutheran Home to a list of institutions specifically listed for exemption. This changed is also slated to be made in McCarran's bill when the Senate considers it.

The legislation has been reported favorably to the Senate but enactment there will have to wait upon the end of the current poll-tax filibuster.

House Majority Leader McCormack, of Massachusetts, called the bill up in the House yesterday, explaining that it was needed to restore the tax-exempt rights of many deserving institutions which recently had been restored to the tax rolls under strict interpretation of present inadequate statutes.

As it now stands, the bill will excuse from property levies:

1. Property belonging to the Federal Government, the District and foreign legations.

2. Art galleries and libraries owned and operated by organizations not operated for private gain and open to the general public.

3. Buildings owned and operated by institutions organized for purposes of public charity.

4. Hospital buildings not operated for private gain.

5. Schools, colleges and universities not operated for private gain and embracing "the generally recognized relationship of teacher and students."

6. Cemeteries not used for private profit.

7. Churches and buildings owned by religious societies used for purposes of religious worship, study, training and missionary activities.

8. Pastoral and episcopal residences which are owned by the churches.

9. A list of specific institutions which could not be fitted under the general terms of the bill, including such organizations as Brookings Institute, the National Geographic Society and the District Medical Society.

The measure also exempts property which the institutions claim is needed for their operation. Accumulation of tax-free land investment is prevented, however, by a provision stating that should any such exempt land be sold at a future date, back taxes will become payable.

BureauAsked For Master Road Plan

Planning Unit Sees New Klingle Bridge As Traffic Key for Rock Creek Park

Formation of a master plan for all roads through Rock Creek Park was requested from the Bureau of Public Roads yesterday by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission after the first session of its regular two-day monthly meeting.

First construction to come under the master plan, it was indicated, will be a new Klingle Valley Bridge, which will greatly accelerate cross-town traffic, officials said.

The commission turned down a suggestion of an emergency flood-control dike in West Potomac Park to protect new Navy buildings there. The commission pointed out the buildings were temporary, and a little water around them would do less damage than construction of an unsightly dike. It was the consensus that no flood to date had been sufficiently high to seriously damage the buildings.

43 Acres Acquired

The commission announced that 43 acres of land needed to complete the Melvin C. Hazen Park, east of Connecticut Avenue near the Bureau of Standards, had been acquired by condemnation approved yesterday. The land extends from Reno Road to the main body of Rock Creek Park, west of the Bureau of Standards and east of the Broadmoor. In announcing the acquisition, the commission declared the park was a fitting tribute to the 53 years of service given to the District by the late Commissioner.

Perfect accord between Maryland State officials and the National Capital Parks and Planning Commission on the long-discussed Washington-Baltimore boulevard was announced, but the construction will not be begun until after the war.

An acquisition of three acres of ground near the Shaw Lily Ponds in Anacostia Park was pointed out yesterday as being in the line of the proposed Anacostia Parkway, which is scheduled to connect with the Washington-Baltimore Parkway.

Loan of Site Approved

The commission approved the loan of a site on Barry Farms Playground, Nichols Avenue and Sumner Road Southeast, for a temporary schoolhouse for Negro children to relieve the overcrowding at Birney School. At present Birney has 50 more children than it can properly accommodate.

Chief item on the agenda today will be consideration of sites for underground air-raid shelters in the Washington Metropolitan area.

Planning officials will hear a report today by John Nolen, jr., on the possible location of the underground shelters. It was indicated that much of the immediate city area was located on land too low for the digging of adequate shelters.

Branch Library Opens Today At Anacostia

Formal ceremonies marking the opening of the Anacostia Branch Library will be held today at 8 p. m. in the branch's temporary headquarters, 1537 Good Hope Road Southeast.

Speakers will include Dr. George C. Havenner, member of the Board of Library Trustees, Commissioner Guy Mason; John J. Watson, president of the Anacostia Citizens Association; William J. Smith, president of Southeast Citizens Council; John Paul Collins, principal of Anacostia High School, and Walter L. Fowler, District budget officer.

The library will be open for inspection after 3 p. m. today, and service will begin tomorrow. Hours will be Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons and evenings; Tuesday and Thursday, 10:30 a. m. to 6 p. m., and Saturday, 9 a. m. to 1 p. m.

May Curb Products

D. C. Acts To Avert Milk Crisis

Relaxation of the Federal milk marketing price regulations and curtailment of the production of by-products will be sought today by the Commissioners as means to prevent the impending 30,000-gallon milk shortage in the District.

Cottage cheese, buttermilk, chocolate milk and coffee and whipping cream, declared by Health Officer George C. Ruhland as goods for "pampered palates," may be sacrificed to keep up the supply of liquid whole milk, if an emergency measure suggested by the Commissioners in a conference with milk producers yesterday is fully adopted.

As an even further step, Ruhland suggested that healthy adults cut down their consumption of fluid milk in order to save it for invalids and children.

Producers Plan Meeting

Although the suggestions were made to the milk producers by the Commissioners, no action was taken, and there was no indication of whether the elimination of by-products will be voluntarily adopted by the industry, ordered by the Commissioners or simply used as a guiding principle.

The producers are to meet among themselves and come back to the CommissRioners with whatever plans or suggestions they have to offer for relieving the milk shortage.

Commissioner Guy Mason will seek an audience today with Secretary of Agriculture Claude E. Wickard to try and have the Federal rules controlling the marketing price arrangements altered to meet the emergency.

Milkshed Extended

Although the Commissioners earlier in the week extended the Washington milkshed 100 miles in radius, this is effective only in the matter of sending out Health Department inspectors to check on the sanitary conditions of the importing producers. The price conditions which the foreign producers would have to meet are set by Federal regulations.

At a conference yesterday with milk producers the Commissioners were told that some local dairy concerns are already cutting down on their by-products of milk. Ice cream, however, is not to be included for the present in the program suggested. It was not decided whether a formal program would be drawn up and submitted for the Commissioners' approval.

There was no report from the Commissioners' request that the Army, which is held responsible for a large part of the shortage, use powdered milk for soldiers in nearby training camps.

B. B. Derrick, manager of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association informed the Commissioners that the 30,000 gallon shortage has been relieved by emergency importation of 20,000 to 24,000 gallons of milk a day from foreign sources.

Shortage of labor as well as the increasing demands of the military and civilian population was given by Derrick as a cause for the 25 per cent drop in milk production. Farm workers are difficult to get, he said, even though wages have been increased as high as 97 per cent for per diem workers, 53 per cent for milkers, 64 per cent for special laborers and 48 per cent for silo workers.

'Castle' Seeks To Raise Room, Board Rates

Whether boarders must pay 49 cents a day more to live in the baronial atmosphere of "Henderson Castle" will be threshed out tomorrow in an all-day hearing before the District Rent Control Board, following a preliminary hearing yesterday.

L. A. Detterer and Mrs. Ethel K. Allison, lessors of the former social stronghold at Sixteenth and Florida Avenue Northwest, have filed a petition with the board to raise the rates of their 45 boarders 27 cents a day for room rent and 22 cents a day for food. Unless they get sanction to do this, they claimed, rising expenses would force them to close the brownstone mansion altogether.

Mrs. Allison testified yesterday that food costs had risen from $946 in 1941 to $1333 last month. She had an assistant chef from the Mayflower Hotel as a witness on the problem of setting a good table at the present market prices.

Against the landlords' favor, however, it was brought out by Ernest Henry, rent control counsel, that the rates charged are already higher than they were in January 1941, which is the freezing date for rents ordered by the Rent Control Act.

So there is a possibility that instead of paying more rent, the 45 boarders might get a refund on the rent and board they have paid in excess of the 1941 rates.

Women Warworkers Plan Future

By Corrinne Hardesty

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 19 (U.P.).—When the war is over a lot of the women who are now making bullets are going to rebel at the idea of going back to raising babies.

And they're gearing their lives now so they won't have to.

Many of those whom I talked said they didn't object to the idea of having children—wanted to have them in fact—but they also wanted to have careers. By training themselves for postwar jobs now they hope to have homes, with servants, plus careers when peace again comes.

At the Curtiss Wright plane factory here I found a typical example in Miss Ruth Dye, 29-year-old member of the factory manager's staff. One of 50,000 women now in the aircraft industry, she said today she "had kind of a brainstorm with herself" when she thought of her after-war future.

"I talked with some of the other girls in the plant," she said as she came off the first shift, "and we agreed that we had better plan ahead.

Started Flying Club

"We organized a flying club. We are learning to fly and when the war is over and thousands of men come back we will be trained as instructors or pilots."

Miss Dye, a slim brunette, who headed a WPA sewing project in 21 Ohio counties for 8 years, has already piled up 45 solo hours and is working toward tests for a private pilot's license. She came to work at Curtiss-Wright last spring. Her job is to help iron out personnel problems.

She explained that by acting as a group the girls—there are now 25 in the club—were able to get flying lessons at a nearby school for about one-third the usual cost.

"That leaves us plenty of money to put in war bonds, which all the girls are buying like mad," she said. "It keeps you pretty busy living in the present and the future all at the same time, but we think we are doing the right thing.

"We are able to take training now for a more specialized job while we work on war production. When the war is over we can move on and make room for others."

Hour by Hour

Lucia Didio, a drill press operator who works seven days a week, said it is hard to get in her flying time but she plods ahead, an hour or so a week when weather permits.

"Working and bond buying weren't quite enough for me," said Lucia, neatly turned out in blue slacks and a bright sweater.

"I keep thinking of my brother in Sicily. We haven't heard from him in two years. We left him there in school five years ago when the family came home from a visit."

"We talked around the idea of the flying for quite a while and then got going," said Gertrude Shiplett, a plant nurse who has piled up the most flying hours, next to Miss Dye. "We all hope to work on the Civil Air Patrol as soon as we complete our training—if the war isn't over by then."

"We probably will expand the club to 50," Miss Dye said. "The girls are very interested and the plant management has given us its blessing.

Planning Ahead

"It may seem silly now to plan so far ahead, but I don't think so. You can see things happening in Buffalo right now that make you realize there are going to be a lot of women wondering what to do with themselves after the war."

One of those things is the training of women bus drivers.

Another is the voluntary registration in an employment pool to be started next week, which will bring out of the homes and into defense work Buffalo's share of the country's 16 million childless women between 16 and 65 needed to relieve the local acute manpower shortage.

Dining Tip From the Feedbox

Men and women who are associated with war production and various Government agencies have taken a tip from society folk and now get many of their meals and afternoon snacks in a unique cafeteria located in a former stable attached to the town house of Undersecretary Sumner Welles. Described by discerning folk-about-town as "the smartest beanery in the Capital," the eating place is operated by the AWVS. Popularity of the place is largely attributed to the surroundings and to the fact that many a lieutenant commander, a brigadier general and even an admiral or two pops in about 1 p. m. for a quick bite. Debbies say sitting across the table from a war leader is more thrilling than an airplane ride with Gable. This photograph shows the line-up at the cafeteria rail. Note the eating stalls at the left

British A. T. S. Send Orders To Second Front Leaders

London, (By Cable).—In a deep underground room, not far from London's Whitehall, khaki-clad women of Britian's Auxiliary Territorial Service are dispatching messages on policy and operations from the Chief of the Imperial General Staff to the new African front, and to every other Allied theater of war, from Iceland to India and from Washington to Moscow.

Working in three shifts, day and night, these A. T. S. women, with men of the Royal Corps of Signals, handle 30,000 messages every week. Because it is through their hands that plans and orders vital to the conduct of the war are passed, these women, perhaps more than any other group of warworkers, feel their closeness to the war.

Messages are received in this secret signals headquarters of the War Office at the rate of 10 a minute. They arrive in cipher, spitting out of a curved, red-based pneumatic tube from the cipher room.

An A. T. S. in-clerk takes them. A particularly important message, such as one from the General Staff to the commander in chief in the Middle East, she hands to the overseas clerk, who makes it priority and "routes" it direct to the Middle East.

In the wireless room, where messages are transmitted by automatic radio, perforators and transmitters have been cleared of all traffic for this "hot" message to go through. Another A. T. S. member slips into her performing machine, which translates the letters into Morse code, dots and dashes. The perforated tape is then run through a Wheatstone transmitter.

From there, the message goes to a high-powered country radio station and direct to the Middle East. The signals are then picked up by a Royal Signals radio station in Egypt where a re-perforator produces an exact replica of the original tape punched by the London operator. The message is deciphered in the Middle East Headquarters Signals Office and cipher office, and is delivered under secret cover to the commander in chief.

Operational messages for the direction of commando raids and other inland activities are handled in the Teleprinter room which is staffed almost entirely with A. T. S. girls. These women, as well as those in the other secret signals offices, are among the highest paid branches of the A. T. S., for they handle the orders which may turn the scale on any battlefront.

'A Penny Saved'

"It's up to the women!"

With these ringing words the Hon. Horatio Bumpus concluded his stirring address yesterday afternoon before a mass meeting of 5000 women at Rumble Auditorium. The meeting was called by Mrs. Farthingale Midas, general chairman of the Women's Little Economies Committee for Winning the War.

Mrs. Midas

Despite the persistent heckling by Mrs. Moronia Gimlet, who constantly interrupted speakers to ask what "little economies" men were making to win the war, the meeting was declared by its sponsors to be a "great inspirational success."

"On all sides we are hearing the call for more little economies by women in the war effort," said Mrs. Midas in introducing the Honorable Bumpus. "So, we have asked one of our Nation's greatest patriots, orators and statesmen to bring us a message on this vital subject."

The Honorable Bumpus, who was wearing a red lapel rose presented him by the Little Economies Committee, began as follows:

"My message to you ladies and to the womanhood of the Nation is that a penny saved is a penny earned."

Mrs. Gimlet

Mrs. Midas and the mink clad members of her committee on the platform applauded enthusiastically.

How About Some Cigar Economy?

"It's up to the women to get down to realities in our war effort," continued the speaker. "Above all, they must begin to save on the little things, sacrifice the little luxuries. 'Take care of the dimes and the dollars will take care of themselves.'"

As the speaker paused for applause, Mrs. Gimlet shouted "Have you given up your two-for-a quarter cigars yet?"

Ignoring the interruption, the Honorable Bumpus continued: "You ladies will be surprised at what savings you can make in little things if you will use your ingenuity. Now my wife—if you will pardon a personal reference—who is a very clever woman, has hit upon the plan of saving every bit of string that comes into our house. In fact, we have not bought a dime's worth of string since Pearl Harbor. Perhaps you ladies do not know it, but the string can be re-used to tie parcels. My wife has the maid launder the used string and it is as fresh and good as new."

"What do you do with your cigar bands?" demanded Mrs. Gimlet.

Sacrifice of Dinner Rings Is Urged

Mrs. Midas pounded her gavel and the Honorable Bumpus continued by saying women could "save substantially by sacrificing their little vanities and luxuries," by giving up their "cream puffs, chocolate bonbons, jeweled lapel gadgets, dinner rings, etc.," and by not using "so many messy face creams and cosmetics."

"How much did you lose at poker last week?" raucously broke in Mrs. Gimlet.

Two women in uniform pulled the disturber to her seat and the Honorable Bumpus hastily concluded his oration.

Miss LaJeanne DeSpain, expert on fashion, beauty, etiquette, modernistic decorations, guppey raising, orchid culture, nineteenth century spittoons, and allied subjects was the next speaker.

Miss DeSpain, modishly attired and wearing a gardenia corsage presented her by the Women's Little Economics Committee urged her hearers to save their Christmas boxes this year.

"All sorts of exciting things can be done with paper boxes," said the expert. "You can make from them everything from bonbon containers to love seats."

Use Leftovers For Hors d'Oeuvres

Miss DeSpain also declared women would have to practice the strictest economy in their kitchens." Don't fry everything in butter," she enjoined. "There are some good substitutes. Also it is no longer necessary to have a fish course with any but a formal dinner. Above all, don't throw away your leftovers. You will be surprised how you can use table leftovers in making original, exciting hors d'oeuvres for your cocktail parties and teas.

The Hon. Bumpus

"We are having to give up many table delicacies," said Miss DeSpain, "but at least there is plenty of bread and we can still have Melba toast."

The expert announced she was starting a class in the use of discarded paper sacks and would teach how to use these articles in making confetti, Christmas festoons, cocktail party hats and numerous other things. "Save all your paper sacks," she enjoined, "file them neatly in cabinets and keep a card index system on them."

Last Years's Sables Are Plenty Good

As the speaker retired to her seat, Mrs. Gimlet gained the attention of the audience long enough to offer a resolution "that the Nation manhood be requested to economize by self-shaving during the duration."

Miss de Spain

She was again silenced and Mrs. Midas made a brief talk calling on the women to "save till it hurt."

"It is no disgrace," she declared, "to wear last winter's coat again this year. Take myself. These sables I have on are 3 years old."

"We can also save by riding on streetcars and buses instead of taxis. You will find a streetcar trip a very educational experience as you will see so many interesting types."

In conclusion, Mrs. Midas read a telegram from Dr. Copernicus Graph, chairman of the National Committee on Women's Little Economies to Win the War. It read: "From women's little economies alone, every family should be able to pay its income tax, the Treasury should be able to liquidate the national debt, and the Nation to win the war."

As the chairman adjourned the meeting, one long shrill mass scream from the audience rent the air.

Household Hints

Your first- aid kit for household cleaning should contain art gum eraser, carbon tetrachloride, or ordinary dough type wallpaper cleaner. Use all three to remove spots as they occur and lighten your weekend cleaning.

★ ★ ★ ★

Your electrical appliances will live long and perform efficiently if they're covered with washable, closefitting covers to keep out dust and dirt.

To remove chewing gum from rugs, take a piece of ice, roll gum into a ball and remove. Then sponge over this spot with carbon tetrachloride.

★ ★ ★ ★

Fresh mildew stains can usually be washed out with ordinary soap and water. If stain still remains, spread with salt and lemon juice and put in the sun. Then rinse out.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Although Mother Is Sympathetic, Girl's Father Objects to Her Having Occasional Dates, as Most Of Her Nice Friends Do; Should She Defy Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 16 years of age, a senior in high school, and I have been having quite a bit of trouble with my father lately. Like all other high school girls, I like to have dates once in a while, but my father objects. He says I am too young to be going with boys; that I will have plenty of time for that later. On the other hand, my mother feels that it is all right for me to go with boys once in a while, provided I am home by midnight. But because my father has the "say-so" in our home, I don't get to go.

My problem is this: When I have my mother's permission to go out, should I go ahead, disregarding my father's opinion? Or should I sit at home, in obedience to him, while all my friends are having a good time together? Everyone of my friends belongs to a nice family; and none of them is allowed to stay out later than 12 o'clock, except for a very special event. They are not the type who go to beer joints and drink and smoke. Not one of them drinks; and only once in a while do they smoke. I will greatly appreciate your advice and will accept your decision as final. Sincerely, WORRIED.

Don't Leave Mother Holding the Bag

DEAR WORRIED: If your father "rules the roost" at your house, so that your mother's dissenting opinion in matters of policy carry little weight, it is rather idle to speculate on the advisability of going against his orders,—isn't it? For example, what would happen if, tomorrow, your mother confidentially admitted to you that she saw no harm in your having a movie date with Johnnie Jones, provided you were home by 11:30; whereupon you broached the plan to father, who said, gruffly, "Nothing doing."—after which you went, anyway? Wouldn't there be hell to pay, on the home front, when father learned that you had flagrantly disobeyed him, in addition to indirectly deceiving him? Because, if he had verbally "put his foot down" on your going, you would have to get out of the house under false pretenses to spend the evening with Johnnie, wouldn't you? And while you might come in for a blistering share of the rough side of father's tongue, mother undoubtedly would be the principal victim of his wrath, when he discovered you two were tacitly conspiring to outwit and defy his "heavy parent" theories.

Only a person who has had first-hand experience with the despot type of male parent, who views with alarm and doggedly resists to the last ditch the appearance of suitors in his teen-age daughter's life, could foresee in approximately accurate detail the fury of the storm which your father would unleash upon your mother's hapless head, in that eventuality. He probably would hold that she was permitting,—yes, even encouraging,—you to "go to the dogs, running the streets with every Tom, Dick and Harry; staying out until midnight and spending your time Heaven only knows where." And would embellish his hysterical charges of her maternal unfitness with dire warnings of "what's sure to become of the child, unless this foolish craving for night life is nipped in the bud," etc. And if she were to try to assuage his angry anxiety, by timidly proffering a reasonably argued defense of the essentially innocent and socially appropriate excursion, he would belligerently shout her down, —with the result, no doubt, that the tempest would subside with her in tears and him in a ferocious huff. In other words, a very strained relationship would develop between your parents,—in the event you were to put your mother in the position of "taking the rap," for your sneak dates.

Parents Have Duty To 'Launch' Daughters

My opinion is that you should be allowed, as a matter of course, to associate openly and casually, on terms of easy comradeship, with boys your own age. Indeed, it is a generally recognized responsibility of parents to cooperate with each other in devising a social program for their teen-age daughters, which gives the latter the largest possible and most tactfully supervised opportunity to "get their bearings" in relation to friends of the opposite sex,—by developing, through regular and approved association with boys, a keenly discriminating awareness of those who are worth cultivating and those whose company should be avoided. The girl who is parentally prohibited from having boy friends until she is fully grown is usually a poor judge of male character,—and most apt to "fall" for the first "smoothie" who comes her way. Or, equally lamentable, to drag through a "wall flower" girlhood and end up a neurasthenic old maid, lonely, insecure and maladjusted to life.

However, the fact that I consider your father's attitude unreasonably severe and essentially unwise would not, I think, justify me in saying you have a right to go against his wishes;—when you are still a school girl, entirely dependent upon his support and therefore necessitously subject to his authority. The situation is not one which you personally can "take by the horns" and rectify. The satisfactory solution of the problem cannot be effected through conference with me; regardless of my sympathetic indorsement of your view. Nor can it be found through secret combined operation with your mother.

One Ethical Premise For Defying Father

The only possible sensible solution of the difficulty consists in having your mother go to bat for you, with your father,—by strongly and stubbornly insisting that you should have some "dating" privileges; and that she is prepared to take responsibility in the matter, by letting you go out once or twice a week, whether he approves or not. Only if she takes that stand, openly and courageously, would you be ethically entitled to "go against his wishes." And if she dares to wrest this concession for you,—as she probably can, if she feels sure of her ground,—then you, of course, would have a tremendous obligation to repay her with the finest kind of dependable conduct, when having "dates."

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Veronica Lake, the Gal With the Hair-do, Passes on Some Advice

Miss Veronica Lake, the girl who started this fashion of the one-eyed hair-do, has a 14-month -old baby and an 18½ inch waistline, and some ideas about keeping fit that I'd be glad to have any of you adopt.

If you are a mother, or expect to become one, you'll be interested in her program after the baby arrived. Within six short weeks she had her figure right back where it had always been—34-inch bust, that 18½-inch waist, and a 34-inch hipline. She is 5 feet, 1 inch tall and likes to keep her weight up around 105 pounds.

How did she get back into shape so quickly?

Followed Exercise Rules to Letter

"I did the exercises my doctor gave me exactly the way he told me to do them, and exactly the number of times. I think most women are apt to do more, or less. It seems to me that precision is what counts. The exercises were easy. One that I liked best consisted merely in lying on my back on the floor and raising the head. I got so I could touch my chin to my chest. But I only tensed the muscles involved in raising my head forward and kept the rest of my body perfectly relaxed and I believe that is very important in doing any kind of exercise. It teaches muscular control so that it becomes possible to relax at will."

Relaxing has become a vital thing in the life of a movie star who combines her picture career with homemaking and finds time to sell bonds for Uncle Sam. The morning I talked with Veronica she looked as fresh as a 16-year-old without a worry in the world—and she had been working so hard and such long hours that she said she wasn't getting nearly enough sleep. But the secret of that is, "I've learned to talk with people and relax at the same time. I had to do it. Some days I've started out at seven in the morning and had to keep right on going until 2 o'clock the next morning. Another thing I have learned not to do is worry. The committees in charge of bond sales in the different towns know all about the arrangements that have to be made, and I let them take care of that part. They do a better job than I could and I know it and don't worry about a thing.

Then Had to Build Herself Up

In spite of keeping relaxed, the whirlwind campaign had taken its toll. She had lost 10 pounds. But like the wise girl she is, she was already taking Vitamin B concentrates and following her doctor's orders to build herself up.

I asked Veronica how she kept her figure while she is making pictures and she gave me a tip for the business girl. At noon she goes to a dance studio and gets in 45 minutes of ballet.

"Other members of the cast think I'm crazy," she said with a smile, "but I work up a good perspiration, have a shower, and come back feeling brand-new while most of them are all tired out. I need that change. I think any working girl who can possibly manage it would benefit from such an exercise program."

I just wish I could sell all of you who are working hard and under strain on the same idea.

But let's get back to that hair-do. The day I interviewed Veronica, she was wearing it under a snood, and she looked demure and young. Incidentally, she is prettier than her pictures! Her next one is to be "Star Spangled Rhythm" and you can take a look at those measurements for yourself.

Exercises will come with greater ease if the room in which you take them is filled with music and beauty. If you are one who has a bedroom that needs a shot-in-the-arm, consider a new bedspread and draperies. The pattern pictured, "Laurel Leaves," so strictly American with American design woven of stout American threads, can give new life to most any bedroom. It is available in wine, blue, yellow, peach and green. Three major points recommend this bedspread—design, durability and color.

Charm, comfort and privacy are requisites every woman likes to have in her bedroom when she returns home after a busy day. The many girls working in Washington who have to call a room their "home" would do well to consider the color, richness and beauty that can be achieved in a room by matching bedspread and draperies. The "Painted Desert," pattern shown at right is available in four predominating colors—green, rose, gray and blue. Bedspreads are made in single and double sizes. The draperies are two and one-half yards in length. The price is $5.99 each for the bedspread and the draperies.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Meddlesome relatives seem to be getting more than their share of attention in the column this week. We'll get them out of our system, as it were, and forget them for a time. One wonders if the new tensions affecting all of us may be at the root of family squabbles. Not for years has the mail been so loaded with complaints about in-laws.

"I have a 16-month-old boy and my troubles are due to my husband's aunt. Everytime she comes to see me she tells me what I should and should not do. And she is so old-fashioned and morbid in her ideas. When I bathe the baby she talks about drowning. When I used to change his diapers she told me I would stick him with the pins. Even when feeding him she mentions choking or tells me he has too much to eat.

"I read a lot about babies. I consult a good doctor, but she doesn't believe anything she reads in books. She tells people I am crazy and don't know how to rear a child. But though I am only 23 I helped take care of my sister's seven children.

"When I am alone with the baby he is very good, but when she is around he is so cross I can't manage him. I believe she is very wrong but I have been taught to be respectful to older persons. However, I am nearly a nervous wreck before she leaves. My husband is behind me 100 per cent and I notice she doesn't get along with anyone. She is a maiden lady."

One must pity her. Her warnings of disaster and her endeavor to override your authority mirror her own disatisfaction and emotional barrenness. She can feel superior only when she orders you around. Thus she masks her own sense of inferiority at never having been a wife or mother.

You can afford to be magnanimous. Don't let your own sense of youth inspire you to refuse all advice. You may resent criticism because you fear to acknowledge even to yourself that you really don't know it all.

So let her talk. Listen respectfully and glean what wisdom you can. Meanwhile, go your own placid way, following the doctor and the dictates of your own judgment. Youth is often as inflexible as age just because it feels insecure and must bluster and stand pat in order not to admit it.

Since your husband stands behind you, don't let this emotionally starved elderly person upset you. No doubt she loves the baby dearly and would like to feel herself partially responsible for his good care.

Our leaflet, "The Problem of Relatives," may be had for those who find it difficult to cope with the differing ideas of the two generations. It may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred, in care of this newspaper.

Safety-First Rules for Household Appliances, Make Them Last Longer

If you want to live a long and happy life among your electric lights and appliances, it would be well to note the following safety-firsts:

Don't disconnect appliances by pulling on the cord. Grasp the plug itself, and remove with a firm, quick motion. It's safer and your cord will last longer, too.

Keep electric appliances and cords dry. Never touch them with wet hands. Don't touch an electric appliance when standing on a wet floor, or when your body is wet from a bath, or excessive perspiration. There's danger of shock if the appliance is faulty.

Never insert your fingers in an empty light socket, you may get a shock. Use a lamp bulb instead. Better yet, keep bulbs in every socket.

Be sure to disconnect appliances with heating elements, such as irons, toasters, heaters, etc. when not in use. Many a fire has started from appliances left connected and forgotten.

Never use substitutes for fuses. Fuses are safety devices to signal when something is wrong. Makeshifts won't protect you.

Vacuum Cleaner Has Attachment For Special Job

If you give your rugs the once-over, then tuck your vacuum cleaner away, you're missing out on some convenient time savers. Let your attachments toil for you. For instance:

Use the radiator attachment to remove wool lint, moth eggs and larvae from the crevices of closets where you store blankets or woolens. Reduces moth troubles to a minimum.

The suction attachment is splendid for cleaning hot-air registers.

Books, book shelves, baseboards, furniture, and the floor beneath too-heavy-to-move pieces can be cleaned with these same handy attachments.

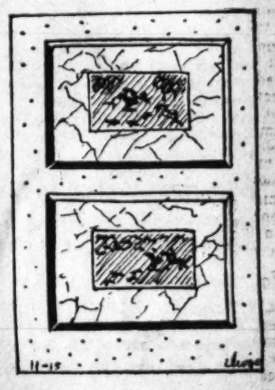
Rug cushions should be thoroughly cleaned at least twice a year. Let your drapery nozzle or furniture brush do this job.

Or you may want to remove the dust in bare corners, or wipe down the walls with the special attachments. Your vacuum cleaner can handle all these housecleaning chores with a minimum of fuss and a maximum of efficiency.

IT'S ABOUT TIME

IT'S ABOUT TIME to place plyboard shelves in a shallow bay window. These are less expensive than glass shelves and very effective if painted to match window frame and placed on level with horizontal strips between panes.

To melt too-small-to-use soap ends: Pour the melted ends into little wooden salad bowls. (These you will find at the dime store.) The wooden bowl of soap will float in the bathtub and you will have fun for your thrift.



To frame your hunting or sporting prints with interesting mats: Red or green imitation leather will make perfect mats. See the upholstery materials department of your favorite store for imitation leather.

Camp Fire Girls Hold Annual Doughnut Jubilee Tomorrow

Taking time out from more serious pursuits, Camp Fire Girls will hold their Doughnut Jubilee tomorrow from 2 to 4 p. m. at Pierce Mill in Rock Creek Park. In case of rain the Universalist Church at Sixteenth and S Streets Northwest will be the scene. The Guardians Association is hoping all friends of Camp Fire will attend, especially girls and Guardians who have recently moved to Washington and have not yet registered with the association.

The queen of the jubilee will be Cassandra Britton, who sold 300 of the more than 6500 dozen doughnuts delivered in the recent two-week campaign. Betty Winkler, runner-up for top honors, and Mary Lou Heindl and Marjorie Jansson, last year's winners, will participate in the ceremony.

At 1 p. m. a special party will be given the two groups which sold the most doughnuts per group and the most doughnuts per girl. They are Aowakiya of Washington and Odakonya of Betheda. Among the Blue Birds, junior organization of Camp Fire Girls, the group under the leadership of Mrs. Allan W. Eddy held the high record. They will receive a pennant for their clubroom.

The money raised at this annual event, which is a tradition with Camp Fire Girls everywhere, will be used for their camp fund and a few other expenses of the local organization.

Benefit Tea Listed Today

The committee for the Scottish Clans Evacuation Plan, headed by Mrs. MacNeil of Barra, will hold their regular Friday open house today at 2522 Q Street.

During the afternoon Lady Broderick and Mrs. Nannie Macomb will pour tea and in the evening Miss Emily McColl will give readings on handwriting. The door will remain open until 9 o'clock.

Legion Dames' Fete Scheduled

The Dames of the Loyal Legion of the District of Columbia will hold their annual card party Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. Jerome J. Wilber and Mrs. David J. Rumbough will open their adjoining apartments in Wyoming Avenue for the event, the proceeds of which will be for the society's scholarship fund, for Lincoln Memorial University in Tennessee, which the Dames have maintained for a number of years. Home-baked goods and sweets will be on sale to add to the funds, and members are urged to bring gifts for the barrels of clothing, games and books which is an annual contribution for Christmas and Thanksgiving sent by the society.

Passed Censor

A Mid-West columnist reported that a Chicago girl received a Christmas card mailed November 21, 1941, in France. The senders had the card printed in the form of a news bulletin and, under the guise of humor, managed to slip considerable information by the censor. It revealed that "Yule Logs are Rationed" and concluded, "the two shadows of their former selves send you their best hopes for a merry Christmas and a happier new year."

THINK before YOU BUY

and WOODWARD & LOTHROP advises—

do your Christmas Shopping without delay

Mothers, wives, sweethearts, sisters—all of you, who have always done the major portion of purchasing—now, with so many men in the service, you must do an even larger share of it. And all of you, the great army of young women holding positions for the first time, know how important it is to learn to spend your earnings wisely.

Due to the multi-sided life you lead and your added responsibilities, though you are doing more buying, you have less time to give to it. So it is most important that you THINK BEFORE YOU BUY—potent reminder of a fact that we have emphasized again and again—there is no substitute for quality.

And, because we have always—ever since our business was founded in 1880—been a store that placed emphasis on excellence, we know the importance of quality and how to get it for you. We know the manufacturers in all lines who are insistent upon high standards—and buy only from such makers.

That is why we say today—THINK BEFORE YOU BUY—be certain of your store, its standards, its reputation, its tradition, its character and its integrity.

When you buy at Woodward & Lothrop, "A Store Worthy of the Nation's Capital," you are absolutely certain of accent on excellence—that your wartime dollar will do its most in your service.

This is Why We Urge You to Shop Early

The Post Office requests that gifts intended for destinations away from Washington be mailed by December 1st.

You should shop early for your greater convenience and to make the load lighter on store workers. We cannot begin to approach the service we have rendered in the past—practically every department is undermanned—so we ask you to be patient when we are not able to serve you as promptly and as efficiently as we would like.

Deliveries cannot be made to any section of the city more than three times a week—many places less frequently. You see then, why we ask you to take packages with you whenever possible—you help save delivery—tires and gasoline—packing and wrapping. And when you are expecting delivery, please be at home to receive your packages.

Christmas shopping before 3 o'clock has worthwhile advantages for all of us—transportation is less crowded—the store is less crowded—and much of our part-time help can work only until 3 o'clock.

Your Help Will Be Greatly Appreciated

Ruth H. Mitchell Tells How to 'Be a Good Citizen'

By Genevieve Reynolds
The Post Club Editor.

Miss Reynolds

RUTH H. MITCHELL

Chat 15 minutes with jocund Ruth H. Mitchell of Minnesota and you're convinced that the most important thing in the world is to be a good citizen.

Once you've met the enthusiastic director of the National League of Women Voters — she's here attending the board session — you begin to wonder why you didn't vote in the last election. In fact, you get a whole new line of thought about your Congressman. You begin to understand that your Representative and Senator are not just errand boys to round up a job or block a piece of legislation contrary to your personal interests. In short, you're eager to become a good citizen.

But what constitutes a good citizen? Does it mean simply doling out to charities; sewing for the Red Cross, or working in wartime activities? It's all that, but more, too. Then let Miss Mitchell tell you. "To be a good citizen," she said, "you must be aware, articulate and active. Realize that government is We, not They. Censors of government seldom realize that they are criticizing themselves."

Study It Out

Realizing that it is impossible to know all the ins and outs of government, Miss Mitchell maintains, however, that a good citizen must know well at least one phase of it. Here is her recipe for going about it: "Take a little piece of government. Get your hands on it. Study, investigate and work it out. Don't try to cram everything down your throat at once; rather, master details bit by bit."

In general, Miss Mitchell thinks that women are becoming more and more government conscious. "Yet, for the most part they are still floundering around and gossiping about government," she averred, "not getting down to real thinking. They pick up and believe everything they hear instead of getting first-hand information."

Still, when a woman does have the right answers and asks intelligent questions of her Congressman, what happens? In one case when a woman wrote to her Representative about the tax bill, the Representative simply replied by sending her a cook book, according to Miss Mitchell.

League's Release

Now taxes are one thing that concern greatly Miss Mitchell. And she's eager that all citizens know what it's all about. This week the National League issued another of its broadsides entitled "What's Ahead in Taxes?" In case you haven't seen one, the broadside offers the following facts:

"In wartime the Government's finance program has two aims: To control inflation by seeing to it that people do not have so much to spend; to raise enough revenue to carry on the war.

"To achieve these aims, the Government may either: Tax incomes (individual and corporate), commodities (through sales tax or excise tax), spending, etc.

"Borrow—through voluntary buying of bonds by citizens, banks, insurance companies, etc.; through compulsory buying of bonds, or through taxes that will be returned in one form or another after the war.

"The problem is to get the best combination: Taxation is the most effective way to reduce civilian spending if the money can be collected at the source before it reaches the individual's pocketbook, or if the tax is on spending, which may be an incentive to savings. When a person feels poor he is likely to spend less. Money raised by taxation leaves no public debt.

Borrowing Problem

"Borrowing, either compulsory or voluntary, is an easier program to push politically. It reaches normal savings quickly and seems less painful than taxation. But when a person, except one with very low earnings, lends money to the Government by buying bonds, he is not likely to reduce his spending as he is to make his bonds a substitute for savings in other forms. Unlike taxation, borrowing increases the public debt.

"The 1942 Revenue Act does increase the revenue by 6½ to 8 billion dollars; does widen the tax base and increase the individual income tax rate. In 1940 there were four million Federal taxpayers; in 1943 there will be 27 million. The total will be nearer 46 million if the Victory tax is included.

"Does not go far enough toward carrying the war cost: War expenditures for 1942 are estimated at 78 billion dollars; non-war governmental expenditures are estimated at 7 billion dollars. Total—85 billions. Federal taxes will provide about 25 billions. Balance to be borrowed unless additional revenue is raised—60 billions.

"Does not provide an adequate check on inflation: It is estimated that there will be at least 15 billion dollars in excess purchasing power."

Graduate of Smith

But more about Miss Mitchell, who heartily indorses the league's stand on the tax question. She has been actively associated with the league since its organization in 1920.

For 11 years while she was president of the Minnesota League, she carried on many important enterprises in addition to the league's work. Since it was organized in 1936, Miss Mitchell has served as chairman of the Minnesota Civil Service Council.

A graduate of Smith College, Miss Mitchell is a greatniece of Jane Grey Swisshelm, first woman editor of a Minnesota paper and the first woman ever to gain a seat in the Press Gallery of Congress. Also she was one of the earliest advocates of civil and political rights for women.

Dr. Martin Is Speaker At Chevy Chase

Dr. Charles E. Martin, head of the Department of Political Science and International Law at the University of Washington, now an exchange professor at American University, discussed "War and Peace in the Pacific," at a recent meeting of the Chevy Chase Club. Mrs. Henry DeCoursey Adams presided.

A resolution honoring Mrs. Frank M. Hoadley, past club president and past president of the Maryland Federation of Women's Clubs, was passed at the meeting. Mrs. Roger Whiteford, chairman of the Blood Donor Unit, announced that the mobile unit will be present from 10 to 3 p. m. Tuesday, December 15, at the clubhouse, and urged members to make blood donations at that time.

Captain Nesbit presented club members with an aerial photograph of the club at the meeting, which also featured donations of cash and foodstuffs for the Montgomery County Hospital.

Servicemen

According to a recent survey by the Department Store Economist, men in our Army voted smokes and waterproof watches as Christmas gift favorites. The sailors want Santa to bring them first a waterproof watch and then a portable radio. But, men in both services said that they wanted Christmas gift cards in their holiday parcels.

President's Cards

Among the many items that President Roosevelt has collected are 3000 Christmas cards—special favorites which he can't bear to throw away.

Children May Differ Widely in Growth Yet All Be Normal, Says Well-Known Physician

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

After the age of four, you will find no reliable rules to guide you about the development of your children. There are no nice summaries. Some are tall, some are short, some fat, some skinny, some quick, some slow with their school work, some are silent, some loquacious and yet all these varieties are quite normal.

Happy are children if parents during these years see their charlimits allow them to follow their acteristics and within reasonable respective bents. Sex has not yet entered into the picture to any extent and they can be guided without consideration of the storms that part of life imposes.

Physically, a child from four to seven should grow about 2 or 3 inches a year, and gain from 3 to 6 pounds a year. This is a terrific change in rate from what has been happening up to that time. It means that clothes are likely to wear out before they have been outgrown, for one thing.

The capacity of children of 4 to 10 for stowing away food is the despair of aging gourmets who have to stop almost before they have begun to eat. A child psychologist, with the mathematical meticulousness that characterizes that species, records that at a birthday party of 10 children, 5 and 6 years old, four and a half dozen sandwiches (ham, egg, cheese and jelly), two and a half glasses of milk apiece, a large piece of birthday cake apiece, a plate of ice cream each and so much candy it couldn't be counted was consumed. And this was just a little extra light snack. They all went home and probably tore into quite a sizeable supper.

I make no comments on the ethics, or at least the good taste, of a child psychologist snooping on a quiet (?) gathering of this kind, but it certainly shows that children of this age can handle adult-sized portions of food.

I think it is very important at this age to teach a child to eat a great variety of foods, especially vegetables. Also to guard against forming prejudices against foods. I can recommend this with some fervor because my own childhood was not so wisely guided in this respect, and I have found only in adult life what pleasures I missed by being perfectly positive I did not like certain articles of food. I was 35 years old before I began to like cauliflower. (And, off the record, snails and eels are now my secret passion.)

Turn Gadgets Into Scrap, Stover Urges

While spectacular pieces of heavy scrap—such as bronze pilasters and the entire tower of an office building—were offered to the Salvage Committee yesterday, a modest proposal for the salvaging of petty scrap from offices was received with equal enthusiasm by the committee.

F. W. Stover, manager of the Munsey Realty Co., wrote to his tenants suggesting that all metal gadgets—ash trays, souvenir calendars and the like—be given for the scrap drive. He also asked that rubber bands and old rubber stamps be turned in for the victory campaign.

So impressed was the committee with the prospects of the cumulative results of such sources that it asked that managers of other office buildings follow Stover's plan.

On the heavy side, the tower on the American Building, 1317 F Street Northwest, has been offered by the Charles B. Hawley Engineering Co. The date for dismantling the landmark has not yet been set.

Bronze Pilasters Offered

Three bronze pilasters used for display purposes by the Derby Equipment Co., Ninth Street and Mount Vernon Place, have been offered to the scrap pile by S. P. Spitz, president of the company. Heavy refrigerating pipes used in manufacturing of ice cream have been offered by Ford E. Young, president of the Fussell Young Ice Cream Co. From the National Union Building, 918 F Street Northwest, huge tanks, pipes, pumps and a large furnace are to go to the steel mills for conversion into tanks and guns.

Public response to the appeal for unnecessary fences has been gratifying, the committee reported last night. A 40-foot iron fence has been offered by Eugene O. Sykes, 3702 Cleveland Avenue; a 45-foot one by Mary A. Morgan of 1637 L Street Northwest. Mrs. Alice Thomas, 40 Porter Street, offered an iron fence and post.

Jalopies Still Coming

Jalopies are still coming in, the committee said. Of 500 offers of junked cars, 27 are now on the pick-up list and six were hauled in yesterday. The remainder must be investigated by the Department of Vehicles and Traffic for title clearance before the District can take them in.

Sixty dealers have registered for the commercial tin can drive to date, the committee said.

However well the rest of the scrap drives are progressing, the campaign for the collection of household fats is still disappointingly lagging, the committee stated, appealing again to the housewives to make this prosaic but vital saving a part of their daily household routine.

CSC Scores Bureau Heads

If Federal department heads do not get busy and correct inefficient and wasteful personnel practices, the Civil Service Commission warned yesterday, the President himself will be asked to do the correcting.

The resolve to go over administrative heads to the White House was announced in the commission's annual report to the President, forwarded to Congress yesterday.

In a special report earlier, the commission charged that Federal manpower—in terms of time and in terms of abilities—is being shamefully wasted, partly because of inadequate supervision. In yesterday's report they said flatly that the time for talking about the wastage was long past and immediate action was needed.

"We intend to call the situation to the attention of the heads of agencies concerned and ask that changes be made," the report declared. If this situation is not acted upon we will call the matter to the attention of the President's liaison officer for personnel administration."

In addition, it said, the commission's recently acquired authority to force transfers of workers to jobs where they are most needed and best fitted will be exercised fully to help correct present conditions.

16th Street Bus Plan Falls Short

The first four days' trial of the two superexpress buses on Sixteenth Street has "not been at all successful," Capital Transit Co. Engineer Dean J. Locke said last night.

Yesterday, he pointed out, on the line terminating at Eleventh and C Streets Northwest there were only 36 passengers in a bus with a capacity of 65 passengers, and only 36 in the 56-passenger Potomac Park bus.

While the experiment has been tried for only four of the allotted 30 days, Locke said that the indications were that the passengers were losing rather than gaining interest in the project, as the daily figures have tended to decrease. On the other hand, he said, developments might take a completely different turn in the course of the next few weeks.

The success of the plan depends on the utilization of the full capacity of the buses, Locke said. Only once has this been realized—on Wednesday morning, when there were nine standees on one vehicle.

Ruhland May Ban Hospital Visiting

The cheerful habit of visiting friends in hospitals may be banned for the duration if Health Officer George C. Ruhland puts through his proposed ban on hospital guests.

Not only are the peace and quiet of the patients to be considered, Ruhland said, but also the peace and quiet of the tremendously overworked nurses, to whom visitors are just another chore.

Moreover, said Ruhland, well-meaning friends often bring with them contagious infection as well as the fruits and flowers they carry.

Ruhland said that his plan has the enthusiastic indorsement of many hospital superintendents, who will meet soon with Health Department officials to formulate a uniform policy for all city hospitals.

OPA Petition Fails to Halt Gas Rate Rise

Justice Matthew F. McGuire in District Court yesterday turned down a petition of the OPA and 11 civic organizations for temporary suspension of the District Public Utilities Commission order sanction order sanctioning a $100,000 tioning a $100,000 rate increase by the Washington Gas Light Co.

The court's action still left to OPA a legal course of action but indicated that the order could not be stayed at this time because OPA had failed to show that the new rates were causing "irreparable and substantial property loss," as required by law.

OPA Utilities Counsel Harry R. Booth said last night his office would "press the appeal" and ask for an early hearing on the merits of the case.

Justice McGuire's decision related only to the question whether he would suspend the PUC order for the duration of the court proceedings in the appeal. This means that gas consumers will continue paying the new rates, which went into effect September 1, despite the pendency of final court action.

Should OPA eventually win suspension of the new rate schedule, the money already paid by the company's customers could be returned if the court authorized that these funds be impounded until the case was finally settled.

Next step in the legal proceedings is the filing of an answer by the PUC, with a transcript of its hearings in the case.

District Court entered the case Tuesday when OPA, ten citizens' associations and the Washington League of Women Shoppers filed petitions protesting the PUC order, after the commission had refused to reopen hearings on the new schedule.

Day Nursery Bill 'Move Toward Socialism'

Surprise opposition to the District Day Nursery Bill arose yesterday when a Washington Board of Trade subcommittee described the legislation as "just one more move toward socialism, such as exists in Germany."

However, members of the board's full Public Schools Committee, receiving the subcommittee's report at a meeting at the Taft House Inn, resolved that "the whole subject be recommitted to the subcommittee for intelligent consideration."

The bill, now pending in Congress, would allow school property to be used as quarters for day nuseries for children of war-working mothers.

The subcommittee reported that the school buildings, teachers and school authorities should have nothing to do with day nurseries or nursery schools, adding that the nursery school has no place in the school system either in peace or war.

Hospitals Favored

"If they must have these nurseries to take care of children of mothers in war they should be operated by hospitals, medical organizations and welfare organizations," declared the subcommittee.

The group charged that any such action on the part of the schools "is just one more move toward socialism, such as exists in Germany, Italy and certain other countries where the children are practically raised by the state."

Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, U. S. A. retired, chairman of the subcommittee on curriculum, presented the recommendationn which was said to be opposed by several members of his 10-man body. About five members were said to have attended the meeting at which it was drawn up.

Dr. Walter E. Hager, president of Wilson Teachers College, said that of course it was better for children to be cared for by their mothers but that proper care should be taken of children of working mothers.

Substitute Needed

Henry Glassie said a wartime substitute for their own mothers was needed by the children and that it was the State's responsibility to see that proper facilities were provided.

John Howard, vice chairman of the public school committee, said he knew of an important Washington bureau where 16 per cent of the women were forced to resign from important war work because of the situation in their homes.

Numerous amendments were passed in an attempt to bring the group to an agreement, but when it was learned that practically no one present had read the bill being so heatedly discussed, the motion to return it to the subcommittee was passed.

Montgomery Ward To Obey WLB Order

Firm's Head Pledges Compliance After Order by Roosevelt

President Roosevelt stepped into the row between the War Labor Board and the Montgomery Ward Co. yesterday by directing the mail order house to comply with a War Labor Board order providing for a "maintenance of membership" clause in a pending union contract.

Although the company had rejected the WLB order as illegal and uneconomic, it had said that if Mr. Roosevelt as commander in chief should direct it to comply, the company would obey.

At Chicago, the Associated Press reported, President Sewell Avery of Montgomery Ward & Co. said late yesterday that President's order "will be promptly obeyed."

Mr. Roosevelt's action was taken in a letter to Sewell Avery, the president of the company. The letter said that compliance was "essential in the interest of our war effort" and directed that the board's ruling be accepted "without further delay."

The maintenance of membership clause gives company employes who are members of the union 15 days in which to resign. If they do not do so within that period, they are considered bound to continue their union membership for the duration of the contract, one year.

The company argued that "employes who are members of the union would not be free to resign from the union without being discharged, and Ward's would not be free to retain a competent worker who had resigned from the union."

In addition, Montgomery Ward contended that the board's order would establish a pattern under which all unions could obtain a closed shop by simply appealing to the War Labor Board. The company also objected to a provision of the contract guaranteeing maintenance of wages and working conditions. Such a proviso, it said, was unsound in such uncertain times.

Mr. Roosevelt, in his letter to Avery, said that the WLB's order was issued under a general management-labor agreement that there "shall be no strikes or lockouts for the duration of the war, and that all labor disputes shall be settled by peaceful means."

The union in the case is the CIO United Mail Order, Warehouse and United Retail Employes Union. Some 6800 employes are involved.

Press Draft Inquiry, Tydings Asks

Senator Tydings (Democrat) of Maryland urged yesterday that Selective Service Director Hershey continue investigating young Government employes who still hold occupational deferments.

Tydings told the Senate that the President "acted wisely, fairly and farsightedly" Tuesday in issuing his order to end occupational deferments in the Federal service except for the few irreplaceable men in technical or specialized fields.

But he warned that an order would not clear up the matter "by a great deal," and said "I am hopeful that General Hershey will continue his investigation until all men improperly deferred are made available for military service."

Tydings, chairman of a special subcommittee which had found some 6000 deferred workers in Federal non-war agencies and asked Hershey to investigate 900 of them, told the Senate that nearly half—42.41 per cent—had had their deferments "lifted or erased," while the limited deferments of another 14 per cent had expired.

Cites a Few Examples

Of the remaining 323 deferred for purely occupational reasons, Tydings declared, "a great many are very young men." As examples, he cited the following:

An engineer aide in the Agriculture Department, 29 years old, single, and in class 2-B; a junior chemist, 23, single, in 2-A; an assistant scientific aide, 28, single, in 2-B; an associate engineer, 25, single, in 2-B; a junior chemist, 24, single, in 2-A; an assistant technologist, 26, single, in 2-B; an engineer-draftsman, 26, single, in 2-B, and an assistant chemical engineer, 28, single, in 2-A.

Senator Stewart (Democrat) of Tennessee, citing yesterday's Washington Post editorial and the more recent estimates that 25,000 rather than 6000 workers in the Government departments have been deferred, asked whether the larger figure were correct.

Tydings pointed out that his committee had limited its inquiry to nonwar agencies, excluding the War, Navy and other departments actually engaged in the war effort.

McKellar Asks About TVA

"The 6000 cases were not by any means all the deferred cases in the Government service," said Tydings.

Senator McKellar (Democrat) of Tennessee, demanded to know whether the research work done by "thousands of young men here" would be a reason for deferment, and also asked whether the TVA was using the rules to excuse its young employes from war service.

Labor Peace Parley To Begin Next Month

Harry Bates, chairman of the American Federation of Labor's committee designated to seek national labor unity through conferences with a committee from the Congress of Industrial Organizations, said yesterday that the meetings have tentatively been set to start December 1 or 2.

Move to Sidetrack Gas Ration For Nation Gains in Congress

By Felix Cotten

International News Service Staff Writer

The congressional movement to sidetrack nation-wide gasoline rationing gathered momentum last night after a militant group of more than 100 Democrats and Republicans, in a special caucus, demanded a 90-day postponement while the whole matter is restudied.

Representative Jed Johnson (Democrat) of Oklahoma, leader of the group, estimated that 200 House members would support legislation ordering a 90-day postponement.

Johnson, as a result of a motion adopted by the caucus, appointed a committee of 15 members to draft postponement legislation, and to discuss various phases of nationwide rationing with interested Government agencies and congressional committees.

Representative Hatton W. Sumners (Democrat) of Texas, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, heads the committee. Other members are Johnson and Representatives Lea, California; Hebert, Louisiana; Wickersham, Oklahoma; Anderson, New Mexico; Kelly, Illinois, and Houston, Kansas, Democrats, and Hope, Kansas; Gillie, Indiana; Case, South Dakota; Johnson, Illinois; Michener, Michigan; Brown, Ohio, and Stefan, Nebraska, Republicans.

Meanwhile, Rubber Director William M. Jeffers told the Senate Banking Committee that he regarded Price Administrator Leon Henderson's tire registration program as "too cumbersome."

"But I have reached the conclusion," he added, "that there are some things you can't do much about.

"A lot of information is sought which does not seem to be needed, but perhaps they ought to have it for their records."

Independent tire dealers protested at the hearing that big rubber companies were forcing them out of the tire recapping and retreading business, and that if the present trend keeps up the Nation will lose most of the facilities now in the hands of the independents, with consequent severe injury to the war effort.

Jeffers said he was working out a program to aid the independents. However, it was revealed that there were two factions of independents, and that one group favored a price "floor" on tire recapping and retreading, while the other wanted competition by outlets of the big rubber companies ended by legislative mandate.

The committee is considering a proposal that some 300,000 small business men be given, by law, all retail tire business, including sale, repair and recapping, but Jeffers testified he thought "it would be a mistake to attempt any legislation until we get further along in the program so that we can get some idea of what is occurring."

He said it was "anybody's guess" how many extra tires would be turned in by car owners, that he had figures "all the way from one million to 12 million" and "guessed it would be midway—about six million."

Out-of-State Workers Must Pay Md. Tax

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 19.—Out-of-State employes who reside in Maryland are just as subject to the State income tax as anybody else, Maryland's Court of Appeals ruled today in affirming the judgment of the Montgomery County Circuit Court in four of five cases in which Government employes claimed they should have been exempted.

In the fifth case, appealed by State Comptroller J. Millard Tawes, the court ruled that the State could demand income tax for a calendar year from anybody residing in Maryland, although residence might have been taken up after the year began. The fifth opinion reversed the lower court.

Appeals were brought by Henry G. Wood, J. V. Morgan, Alexander Tucker and J. H. Lewis, all Montgomery County residents and employes of the Federal Government, after Tawes sued for 1939 income tax payments. Wood also contended that if he was subject to the levy he should have been taxed only for the portion of the calendar year in which he lived in Maryland.

Part of Upkeep Burden

Chief Judge Carroll T. Bond handed down the opinion and said the high court had ruled that because the appellants had shared all the benefits of the State during the taxable year, such as schools for their children, property owned by the State, roads to which they had access and use of the State courts, they also should be required to pay part of the upkeep burden.

When the suit was instituted by Tawes, Lewis was an Army colonel; Morgan, a member of the District of Columbia Tax Appeals Board; Wood, legislative counsel to the United States Senate, and Tucker, a Department of Justice attorney.

They charged that their duties were analogous with Maryland public officers, who, they said, were exempt under the 1939 tax, and that because of this the State income tax was discriminatory against them. Judge Bond held that they had not been able to prove the alleged discrimination in their analogies and hence the appeals court held that no discrimination had been shown.

Lewis had claimed that because he had beeen ordered to duty with the Army at Washington, he could not become subject to the Maryland tax by having a mere abode in this State. But both courts agreed that "his orders did not require him to live in Maryland. He was ordered to report to Washington * * * and the statue does not exempt from taxation Army officers living in Maryland."

Attorneys for the appellants had argued during the hearings that the decision of the case would affect the taxable status not only of hundreds of service men on duty in Washington, but all others who were forced to live in Maryland because of housing conditions in the Capital.

Victory Girls Delinquency Draws Fire

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 19.—Rising juvenile sex delinquency among those who "label themselves victory girls" must be halted by action of mothers and schools, former Magistrate Jeanette G. Brill told the Federation of Jewish Women yesterday.

The former Brooklyn Children's Court jurist attributed the "sad situation" to a changed psychology which she said existed among younger girls today.

"They label themselves the victory girls," she asserted. "They think that the boys are here today but may be dead tomorrow, and they reason: 'We'll give them all they want.'"

"We have got to stop bringing unwanted war babies into the world," she declared, adding that mothers could help remedy the causes of delinquency by supervising the after-school activities of their teen-age daughters, while schools could remain open afternoons and evenings to provide places for wholesome relaxation and study.

Declaring that war always brought about an increase in juvenile delinquency, the former magistrate said she feared America's delinquency rate would rise to the 46 per cent found in England. "Unless we have unity of action in doing something about it."

NINTH STREET RETURNS TO GLORY. Col. "Jimmy" Lake, unofficial Mayor of Ninth Street for the last 30 years, plans to return that thoroughfare to the glories of its turn-of-the-century days. On Monday Colonel Lake will open his new "Gay Nineties Night Club" at 517 Ninth Street. There'll be moustachioed waiters, candle light, other effects reminiscent of the period of bustles, furbelows and jigsaw verandas. "We will feature a guest artist each week who will bring back memories of the old days," said the Colonel. "We expect to have Evelyn Nesbit for the opening." . . . Something tells us that Colonel Lake's new mid-Victorian bistro is going to be a panic.

The selection of "Miss All States" at Washie Bratcher's dance at the Washington Hotel tonight has been postponed until next Friday. So many beauties have registered that Washie's all tangled up in untangling the entries.

BARNEE, YOU FIBBER. When Barnee of the Shoreham lifted a 4-year-old bundle of prettiness and smiles on top of the piano at the dinner hour the other eve, someone shouted "Whose baby is that?" and Barnee hollered back "Mine." But Barnee's no papa. The cute itsy-bitsy was Joy Luse, granddaughter of Mrs. Pearl Best, the culinary director of the Burlington, who looks no more like a gramma than Irene Dunne.

"JINGLE BELLS" is out as a request number at the Neptune Room, according to a memo sent to Dave Roberts' band by the management which still writhes under the memory of numberless glasses chipped by knife and fork swinging of guests at "Jingle Bells" concerts during last year's holidays. P. S. Dear N. R. Management: How about putting "Jingle Jangle" under the ban, too?

YOUNG LADIES WHO COUNT EXTRA. Sheila Barrett is nationally known as a brilliant and sophisticated entertainer. But now that she's here at the Troika, she draws an extra crowd—of those folks who remember her as "Marian Barrett's little girl" when the Barrett family lived at Wardman Park when the hotel was spang new. . . . Judy Ellington has sung with the country's No. 1 radio bands, but now that she's back in her home town decorating one of its most knowing spots, Paul Young's, the ringside is populated every night with Judy's friends from away back. . . . Bill Strickland leads his orchestra at the Lotus, runs a music bureau, dabbles in promoting—and we've a sound idea that his amazing energy is based on the serenity, charm and common sense of the little "Missus" Bill, his partner since an almost schooldays marriage. . . . We've found out why Al Orrison, head man at Treasure Island, goes off to New York in such a carefree manner to hunt headline entertainers. The blonde and chic, but keen-eyed young person who runs Treasure Island while he's away is none other than Mrs. Al Orrison. . . . And she has quite a resemblance to Peggy Burt, who's running Burt's Trans-Lux for the duration while husband Burt does his bit with the Coast Guard. . . . Both executive and entertainer is Sally Goodwin of the Casino Royal. Her poise and attractiveness put her on a par with leading emcees of the allegedly stronger sex. . . . Know why you've been missing that cute warbler, Mary Le Marr, from Lounge Riviera? She's having her tonsils out. Her favorite doctor is in Kansas City and she went clear out there for the operation.

Sixty of his fans from Hagerstown, Md., came down to attend Rocco Terrone's opening at Mayfair. . . . Can't tell you yet, but Adrian Rollin, who's making such beauteous music at the Dubonnet Room, has something tremendous on the fire. . . . Louis Prima, whose fans have been jamming the Victory Room on weekends, co-starred in the movies with Alice Faye, Don Ameche and the Ritz Brothers. . . . Hi Hat's Jack Neal is blending his bass with the haunting contralto of Joy Robinson, the spot's new thrush. . . . Frank Ruiz of Copocabana is our newest maestro, and a mighty good one. . . . Maestro Michel of the Plymouth is a musicians' muscian, attracts an impressive clientele of professionals. . . . River Bend's George Stein has an eight-year record of never having missed playing a request.

Recipe Contestants Give Interesting Versions Of Rice Dishes

Rice can claim a well-earned place in epicurean favor. In addition to being a thrifty food it is also a flavor extender. The casserole shown here is a combination of rice, vegetable juice cocktail and Vienna sausage. Cheese should also be an accompaniment to be juciciously sprinkled over individual servings

If your acquaintance with rice is limited to rice pudding or as a potato pinch-hitter, then it's high time to do a bit of exploring of this important staple food.

You won't have to explore if you try the winning recipes of The Post recipe contestants. You will be glad to find so many excellent suggestions for cooking this cereal, for in these days of rising food costs and limited supplies everyone has to devise new dishes.

Rice is just as appealing served at breakfast as rice pancakes or rice waffles as it is when used to make luncheon dishes such as rice tomato soup, fish chowder and rice, or dinner dishes such as rice ragout, stewed kidneys and rice tamale pie.

Mrs. Andrew G. Weaver, winner of the first prize of $3, considers rice worthy of being on a "company" dinner menu. Mrs. Weaver's suggested menu and recipe for Casserole of Wild Rice and Mushrooms follows:

Dinner Menu

Cranberry Juice Cocktail
Roast Duck
Casserole of Wild Rice and Mushrooms
Buttered Broccoli
Hot Rolls Butter
Pineapple Sherbet
Coffee

The following recipe makes the wild rice casserole:

CASSEROLE OF WILD RICE AND MUSHROOMS

Drain 1 cup, soaked, wild rice, cover with boiling salted water. Let stand 20 minutes. Drain. Brown 1 can mushrooms in butter. Add 2 tablespoons flour and 2-3 cup milk to make sauce. Mix sauce with rice. Add ½ teaspoon salt and pepper. Place in greased casserole. Cover with very thin layer of buttered crumbs. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees.

Mrs. C. N. Malone, Woodley Park Towers, 2737 Devonshire Place Northwest, wins second prize of $2.00 with recipe for sweetbreads and rice. Her recipe follows:

RICE RING WITH CALVES' SWEETBREADS

Cook 2 cups rice in hot salted water for 20 minutes. Keep hot while preparing white sauce made with 4 tablespoons flour, 4 tablespoons butter and 2 cups thin cream, salt and pepper. Cook 1 pound of sweetbreads by boiling gently in salt water with a little vinegar added. When sweetbreads are tender (about 20 minutes) remove skins and tendons. Cut into dices Add to cream sauce together with 2 tablespoons chopped ripe olives. Mold rice into a ring and then unmold onto a platter. Fill center with sweetbreads. Sprinkle top with sweet red pepper and nutmeg. Add chopped parsley. Around rice ring place buttered broccoli flowerettes and garnish platter with parsley and lemon quarters.

The following are the winners of the ten $1.00 prizes and their winning recipes:

Small Plants Get Warwork Contracts Daily, Holland Says

By the Associated Press

Lou E. Holland, chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, said yesterday that he was placing military supply contracts "every day" with small plants in all parts of the country.

He estimated that the contracts already let plus recommendations approved so far will provide $18,000,000 worth of business for hundreds of small manufacturing establishments, many of which faced bankruptcy.

He said, "We are getting enthusiastic support from some procurement agencies—not all—and I think we are making good progress."

He declined to name those Government agencies which are not cooperating in the special program authorized by Congress to provide work for small plants.

As an example of how the corporation and the smaller plants division of the War Production Board, which he also heads, work, Holland related the story of a bomb contract.

"The Chemical Warfare Service of the Army," he said, "was ordering a new type of incendiary bombs. Chemical Warfare had already planned to have the bombs made by some large firms which were doing similar work.

"But before they let the contract, an engineer from Smaller War Plants suggested that some smaller concerns could handle the work. We made a quick check of the small plants on our lists, checked with those concerns on their facilities, and satisfied Chemical Warfare that these plants could do the work.

"As a result Chemical Warfare ordered 2,600,000 of these new bombs from eight small companies in New York City and six in Kentucky."

He said this was a typical procedure and illustrated how his organization both found the Government business could be done by small paints and also located, on its own initiative, the plants to do the work.

While conceding that most of the war business already had been allotted to big concerns and saying that the legislation he is administering came "18 months too late," Holland said that he had hopes that there was still time to provide work for a large proportion of the small plants. He said he knew neither the number of small plants needing work nor the number for which work can be provided, but would do his best.

Although Congress provided $150,000,000 to finance small plants, Holland said "comparatively few" of the plants seemed to need loans from this fund. He said banks were being more liberal in providing local financing.

Army Life Aids 'High-Strung' Stomachs, Physician Says

Kansas City, Nov. 19 (AP).—Among other reasons for joining the Army:

Stomach aches.

For, declares Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, professor of medicine at the Mayo Foundation of the University of Minnesota, Army routine may cure many stomach ailments.

"The high-strung, intensely ambitious man who may have been driving himself to ulcers in his business," he suggests, "may find military life a haven of peace.

"Others will do the planning for him. He'll relax, forget his personal schemes, and presently find that Army chow goes through his food canal without so much as a whimper, much less a growl."

Other nonmedical cures for stomach ailments, he said in an interview, might include:

A raise in pay; a vacation; a change in job; or even the difficult decision to quit trying to become a big shot.

Of course, he added, Army life is no sure cure for ulcers, and Army examiners are turning down most ulcerous volunteers or draftees.

Many a little man, he declared, finds that war hazards intensify rather than cure ulcers.

"But the man whose nervous energy in private life may have been upsetting his stomach could quite possibly find better health taking orders from Uncle Sam."

On the other hand, those subject to military worries "are at a tremendous disadvantage. They can't get a glass of milk every two hours as they should do in private life. The tensions of war may knock them out before they ever get close to an enemy bullet."

Among others who need to calm down if they would avoid ulcers, he listed:

Sultan Mohammed Pledges U. S. Army Full Cooperation

Rabat, French Morocco, Nov. 18 (Delayed) (AP).—Amidst scenes of exotic splendor, Sultan Sidi Mohammed, ruler of the Sherifian or native empire, today pledged complete cooperation with the American Army in French Morocco.

A similar pledge also was given by the French resident general, Charles Auguste Nogues.

The Sultan's decision to support the American forces was communicated to Maj. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., in the throne room of the palace during the festival of the enthronement, an annual ceremony at which the Sultan received high representatives of the French government to discuss the state of the country.

Civilians Face Greater Curbs, Leaders Warn

By Frank Carey
Associated Press Staff Writer

Boston, Nov. 19.—Two civilian war leaders served notice today the Nation faces the sacrificial choice "between baby carriages and bullets" and possibly risking pneumonia rather than deny fuel to our fighters.

At the same time, a business chieftain said private enterprise must plan now to furnish post-war employment or "the state will be the employer" and the country will become state-dominated.

The declarations in behalf of greater civilian sacrifice were made by Manpower Chairman Paul V. McNutt and Price Administrator Leon Henderson, while U. S. Chamber of Commerce President Eric A. Johnston sounded the employment challenge at the first New England war conference.

President Praises Stand

The meeting was praised by President Roosevelt in a message declaring:

"The free exchange of ideas through regional discussion can be of first value to the conduct of our war. It can also pave the way for the better world we are resolved to create out of this war."

Declaring it is only common sense for manufacturers making less essential civilian supplies "to get ready for drastic changes," McNutt said:

"It should be obvious to anyone that if a choice must be made between candy and caissons, between baby carriages and bullets, between stoves and shells, we—and not our soldiers—will have to do without."

And in the future, he said, deferment from military service will depend more upon the kind of work a man is doing and less upon whether or not he has dependents.

Discussing the East Coast oil shortage, Price Administrator Henderson declared at a press conference that "if it ever came to a choice between risking pneumonia and of getting oil to troops going into Tunisia, I don't think any medical director would fail to choose the latter."

Later Henderson told the conference that the coming year would see an increase in "victory models," or simplified civilian goods and said that they would not be confined to such durables as bicycles and the like.

Challenge of Future

"You can have them in women's stockings—or in foods for that matter," he asserted.

But, just as great as the grim challenge of world-wide war is the "inspiring challenge of the future, an adventure in construction," said U. S. Chamber of Commerce President Johnston, adding:

"If private enterprise can't provide employment for most of our people after the war we might as well understand now that the American enterprise system and many of our freedoms will be extinguished, the state will be the employer, and the people will be under state domination and direction."

Cooperation Needed

"We cannot resume infantile bickering," he said, "nor again embrace principles of group selfishness after the war if we expect to win the peace. Management alone will not be capable of solving the problems of tomorrow. It will require the best thinking of our wisest leaders in labor, management, agriculture and Government. It will require compromise between these groups and subordination of self-interest to national interest."

William L. Batt, vice chairman of the War Production Board said that "by standards elsewhere, we have been a rich, carefree, soft, undisciplined people. We must become hard, business-like, disciplined, efficient warriors."

Widow Takes Boland's Seat

SWORN IN—Speaker Sam Rayburn of the House administered the oath of office to Mrs. Patrick J. Boland yesterday on Capitol Hill. Mrs. Boland, widow of the majority whip, took over the House seat of her late husband in the Pennsylvania delegation for the remaining few weeks of his unexpired term

500 Million People Are Short of Food, Hoover Declares

New York, Nov. 19.—Herbert Hoover, who supervised the feeding of Europe's starving millions after the first World War, estimated today that 500 million people will be suffering from food shortages when this war ends, with the job of feeding them falling principally to the United States.

Writing in Collier's Weekly, he warned that now is the time to prepare for this gigantic job.

We must do it if we are to have a lasting peace instead of a lasting anarchy, he said.

"If this war stopped tomorrow there would be millions of permanently debilitated adults and millions of stunted children," he wrote. "But there will always be millions who can be saved. If European civilization is to be saved they must be fed. And especially this must be done for the children or we shall be faced with a generation of physical degenerates and potential gangsters."

Jurney Denies 'Arrest' Of Senator Bunker

By the Associated Press

The Senate sergeant-at-arms, Chesley W. Jurney, told reporters yesterday that Senator Bunker (Democrat) of Nevada, had not been arrested in a recent attempt to obtain a quorum for action on the anti-poll tax bill, as was reported Saturday.

The sergeant-at-arms explained that Bunker had been absent at lunch and was preparing to leave his office for the Senate floor when the deputies reached there. Jurney said no arrest warrant was served on the Nevadan who, he commented, was one of the most regular attendants at Senate sessions.

Regulation Held Harmful To War Effort

An apparent "distrust of democracy," evidenced through imposition of rationing and other regulations on the American public, has a tendency to impair rather than promote the success of the war effort on the home front, Merle Thorpe, editor of "Nation's Business," declared yesterday in an address before the Alexandria Kiwanis Club.

For generations, Thorpe declared, America has depended on the spirit of its people in making voluntary sacrifices and voluntary contributions which have been instrumental in the survival of the Nation. In the present war, however, he asserted, the Government is "casting aside the traditional tool of democracy" in submitting the people to regulations and restrictions under which severe penalties have been provided for violations.

"In casting aside the great American tradition of volunteer effort," Thorpe declared, "the Government is adopting the attitude that democracy can function only at the polls in November."

Thorpe charged that a "general bewilderment and confusion resulting from too many Government agencies" had falsely been construed as lack of patriotism and failure to cooperate on the part of the American public.

Throughout the present war, the speaker said, American resourcefulness has found the answer to most of the problems presented by wartime restrictions on commerce and industry, and he predicted that this same factor would overcome even more stringent restrictions and greatear industrial problems.

When the war ends, he added, this Nation will be in a completely new and unfamiliar era. The outbreak of war, he pointed out, interrupted the progress of numerous new experiments and developments which are certain to be concluded with the final peace, possibly revolutionizing our entire way of living.

Davis Asks Public To Shun Politics In Judging War

Elmer Davis, director of War Information, cautioned the public last night against letting politics color its judgment of the war effort.

In a radio address designed to explain the policies under which military information is withheld, Davis denounced rumor-mongering about false reports of American losses and commented:

"It may be a coincidence that this criticism reached its peak in the week before the election."

Without mentioning names, Davis rebuked two members of Congress for allegedly false statements on military losses.

He suggested that some of the skipticism about battle reports has been due to "some people, who in their zeal for brutal frankness, almost seem to feel that the Government ought to put out bad news, whether it has any or not."

Davis said the whole policy of withholding certain types of military information from the public was justified by the success of the American occupation of North Africa.

OPA to Appeal W.M.&A. Rate Hike Ruling

The Office of Price Administration yesterday notified District Court that it would take to the United States Court of Appeals a decision dismissing OPA's suit to force the Washington, Marlboro & Annapolis Bus Co. to discontinue a 5-cent fare increase on the Washington-Seat Pleasant line.

The notice of appeal was filed by Fleming James, OPA attorney, who said the appeal petition itself would follow in a few days.

The injunction suit was dismissed Wednesday by Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, who ruled that the W. M. & A. had complied fully with the law in putting the increase into effect. OPA had charged that the bus company had failed to notify Office of Economic Stabilization of the increase, as provided by an amendment to the Emergency Price Control Act, passed October 2.

Justice O'Donoghue pointed out, however, that the amendment did not apply in the case, because W. M. & A. had served notice on the Interstate Commerce Commission 10 days before passage of the law.

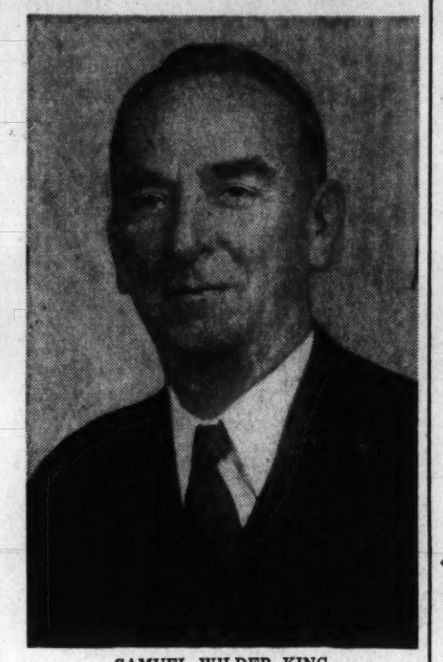
Finishing Fourth Term in Congress, Delegate King Looks Forward to New Assignment—In the Navy

When the current Congressional session draws to a close early in January, at least one member will answer that final roll call without a moment's regret. He is Samuel Wilder King, retiring Delegate of the Territory of Hawaii, who on the following day will return to his first love, the United States Navy . . . and Uncle Sam's armed forces will gain one of the world's foremost authorities on the Pacific area.

Ever since enemy bombs burst over Pearl Harbor, Delegate King has been toying with the idea of going back into service. Meanwhile, however, there were other decisions that had to be made even sooner. The problem of whether to enter the campaign for reelection was solved quickly.

"While I was finding out whether the Navy wanted me again, I decided to go on with the campaign," he said. "Then, almost as soon as I had won the primary, I found I could get back into uniform . . . and that's all I needed to know."



SAMUEL WILDER KING

A graduate of the Naval Academy in 1910, to which he was appointed by the then Hawaiian delegate, Prince Jonah Kuhio Kalanianaole, Delegate King served in the Navy for 14 years, and then resigned in 1924 to enter business in Honolulu.

"I left the service at a time when my resignation meant just a promotion for somebody else," he said, with a twinkle in his brown eyes. "Now, with a war on, I feel that Uncle Sam deserves to realize something on the four-year investment he made in me many years ago."

He added, modestly, that many persons could carry on the work of representing Hawaii in Congress, and that he was sure his successor, Joseph R. Farrington, Honolulu publisher and son of a former Governor of Hawaii, would do it well.

Delegate King's naval assignment has not been announced. Perhaps he will command a force on one of the many islands vital to American positions in the Pacific, while the Navy gathers strength for an assault on Japanese positions in Truk and the Gilbert Islands, and launches the offensive to smash the enemy forces wherever they may be.

There are few parts of the Pacific that Mr. King does not know. He was in charge of the naval expedition aboard the U. S. S. Tanager and Whippoorwill, which made eight voyages of discovery and study to the west of Hawaii as far as Wake and Guam, and far to the southward, touching all the Line Islands. Not long ago he sailed over much of this area again, aboard a Coast Guard cutter.

He has made three trips back to his native Hawaii since December 7, 1941; and only recently returned from there with highly interesting reports on life in the islands that were formerly the "playground of the Pacific."

When I interviewed him in his Capitol Hill office the other day, he mentioned a few of the ways in which war has wrought a complete transformation there. Honolulu, once a blaze of light until midnight, and long afterward, is now completely blacked out. All the islands are, of course, under martial law, as they have been since the attack on Pearl Harbor. Dimly lighted cars may traverse the roadways until 8 o'clock, but no later. All pedestrians must be off the streets by 10 o'clock, at the latest. Motion picture houses are closed at 9 o'clock, and customers coming out at that time have to make their way home through streets on which there is no ray of light.

"Night life as Honolulu used to know it is no more," Mr. King went on. "Parties? Oh yes, there are still parties, but most of them take place during the daylight hours. Cocktail get-togethers are from 4 to 6; dinners are served around 5:30, if not at mid-day . . . and if you want to have a game of cards in the evening, and your house is large enough, you usually ask your guests to spend the night."

The magnificent Royal Hawaiian Hotel has been turned into a rest home for service men. Many homes facing that famous beach of Waikiki have been given over to the armed forces. Doris Duke Cromwell's widely publicized mansion is now a USO club.

"Every able-bodied person does some kind of war work," Delegate King went on, "and the anxiety and tension so widely felt in the early days of the war have grown far less noticeable in recent months. There is a labor pool from which workers can be drawn either for the war effort or for carrying on production of Hawaii's two great industries—sugar and pineapples. And, thanks to expert management, the production of sugar this year will reach a surprisingly high figure, despite the war. Around 850,000 tons.

"All in all the Territory is back on its feet once more," said Delegate King, "and everybody there seems confident that never again will an enemy force find Hawaii off guard."

James A. King, father of the subject of this piece, was Minister of the Interior for the Republic of Hawaii before its annexation to the United States, and it was during his administration that Necker Island, some 400 miles north of Honolulu, was annexed in 1894. That was the time that the British were reported ready to claim Necker as a cable station, and when the island became part of Hawaii, the British were forced to locate their cable link at distant Fanning Island . . . and the Vancouver-to-Fanning cable became the longest single line in the world.

Leathernecks Have Plan For Xmas Gifts

And then there is the question of what kind of Christmas gifts the servicemen will send to their friends back home.

The Marines in Hawaii have decided on a plan of action in this regard. If you have a friend there you may receive a penny postcard as a gift this year, instead of a bulky package. The plain postcard, with the heading, Christmas, 1942, 820 Puuuani Place, Honolulu, Hawaii, is printed in red ink and is self-explantory.

It reads:

No stage coach, no holly, no Santa Claus,
A penny postal this year, because
We're sending a gift in your name, instead,
To a United States Marine in a hospital bed.
No boxes, no ribbons, no Christmas check;
But Aloha to you . . . from a leatherneck.

'So Much For So Little—'

Letters of Gratitude From Yugoslav Prisoners Inspire American Friends Here to Continue Sending Them Packages by Way of the Red Cross

"Their gratitude for so little—is sad."

Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Yugoslav Ambassador, speaks of the lettters that have been received from Yugoslav prisoners of war in thanks for the packages that have been sent them. These packages, mailed via the Red Cross, are assembled and packed at the Yugoslav Embassy, where the Washington Committee of the American Friends of Yugoslavia is hard at work doing what they can to make life just a little more bearable for the interned warriors of still-fighting Yugoslavia.

"The letters that we receive," explains Mme. Fotitch, "are an inspiration to our workers. They are so simple and courageous."

This Letter Tells a Story

Here is a letter from a Yugoslav prisoner that tells its own story. Translated from the Yugoslav original, it was transmitted through the Red Cross. "At this painful moment for us, who are separated from those whom we love and from the entire world, we have just received your beautiful packages which have brought us great joy. All the prisoners of other nationalities in our camp have received aid from various sources except us, the Yugoslav prisoners. We expected them, however, but without much hope. But how wrong man is! It is at the moment when he thinks himself forgotten that help comes to him, succor which serves as a dressing on a wound!

"It was only a few days ago that the news spread around like lightning in our camp, that a car full of packages was about to arrive from Geneva for us Yugoslavs. One ought to have seen the expression on our saddened faces on which, instantly, were reflected joy and gaiety. From every side one could hear our exclamations: 'Imagine, there is after all someone who is thinking of us.'

"When I received my package, my heart beat hard and I was trembling with emotion. I hastened to open it. Oh, what a surprise when I saw the coffee, which I had had none of for a very long time. My surprise grew still more: Cocoa, preserves, chocolate and, greatest of all joys, cigarettes. How much I appreciate them!"

And if you wonder why the Yugoslav package-senders are thrilled with their jobs, read this letter: "I received one of the packages you sent us . . . I am a poor man and have no one at home who could send me even the most modest package. Therefore, you can scarcely imagine my joy and emotion when I, perhaps the neediest one of all, received this package. Its contents were so good . . . I was moved to the point of tears by such kindness which, believe me, I shall never forget."

Allied Spirit Put Into Words

Another letter puts the spirit that unites our allied world into words. . . . "Their (American) decision to give help to their brothers in captivity is all the more precious because of the fact that the enormous distance which separates us has not destroyed in their hearts the feeling of compassion for their brothers who have lost their liberty."

These thoughts, and many others like them, are the reasons behind the Christmas Bazaar to be held at the Yugoslav Embassy from November 30 through December 2. The money raised from the sale of knitted goods. Christmas cards, dolls and other items, will go to defray expenses for the packages already sent to the prisoners of war.

Working to Make Up Lost Time

The desperately serious situation of Yugoslav prisoners of war dates from March 27, 1941, when the Yugoslavs declared themselves emphatically on the United Nations side and resisted the greatest military machine the world had then known. The Nazi invasion was so swift—though they fought valiantly as long as human spirit at its best could hold out aganist machines—that a large portion of the army was overwhelmed. Since Gen. Mihailovich and his guerillas are still fighting in the mountains, Yugoslav prisoners have only recently been allowed the privilege of receiving parcels like other prisoners of war.

Now the committee at work is trying to make up for lost time and is collecting clothing, food and small luxuries from all over the country for shipment from Washington. Individual soldier packages are now allowed, too, and as the labels come from prisoners—these act as permits for such packages—the parcels are sent out.

Then come the letters of thanks and the feeling of inadequacy of the workers that they cannot do more for these men who have never lost their courage or their faith in freeedom.

The Old Met 'Opry' House 'Ain't What It Used to Be'

Vanderbilts and Astors Missing, Many Boxes Reserved for Men in Uniform

By Inez Robb

International News Service Staff Writer

New York, Nov. 19.—The Metropolitan Opera, which has struggled manfully to remain in business since 1929, has been struck an all-but-mortal blow.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, its star attraction in the famed diamond horseshoe, will not perform there during the coming season.

For the first time in more than a generation—or at least in a pedigreed dog's age—the leader of New York's haute monde has kissed the opera from her social calendar.

Not the war, but mourning in the family, is believed to have motivated Mrs. Vanderbilt in her defection.

But Park Avenue panted heavily at the ominous news today and asked itself "What price glory?"

And well it may, for the Met is opening its fifty-eighth season next Monday night, November 23, with more than its pince-nez down. The list of box-holders for the coming season, announced by the Met, indicates that the social bars are down.

Famous Names Missing Now

Not only is Mrs. Vanderbilt's name missing from the once-scintillating list of boxholders at the Met but so are the names of Astor, Morgan, Gerry, Cutting and others intimately associated with the old 400 and the old Met.

Even the name of Gould, which never quite made the social grade but always sounded pretty glamorous anyway, is absent from the diamond horseshoe roster this season.

In the place of these tried-and-true old-timers are many newcomers with an apparent yen to sit in the diamond horseshoe and the wherewithal to do it.

Mrs. Vanderbilt does not elect to sit in Box No. 3, heretofore sacred to her entrances and exits.

But Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce, who was elected to Congress for the first time earlier this month, has also elected to add to the razzle-dazzle of a Met opening by taking a box in the horseshoe for the first time this season.

Clare Booth To Attend

This is a month of "firsts" for Mrs. Luce, as this is probably among the first instances of a member of the lower House having sufficient clam shells for a box seat at the New York Opry.

Another beautiful blonde who will radiate from the box section this season is Mme. S. Voronoff, wife of Dr. Voronoff, the Vienese doctor who made monkey glands famous, or vice versa.

If the list of boxholders for the Met season of 1942-'43 seems passing strange, there are, nonetheless, a few of the first settlers still in evidence in the horseshoe section. Mrs. Otto Kahn, whose later husband was a pillar of the Met; the Duchess de Talleyrand, the former Anna Gould; the indestructible Mrs. Watts Sherman and Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius N. Bliss will be in their usual red plush pews.

Two Titians of finance, Myron C. Taylor, President Roosevelt's Man Friday at the Vatican, and Thomas T. Watson are again among the boxholders.

If the Vanderbilts, Astors and Morgans have deserted the Met, the Whitney clan is still faithful. Lieut. Col. Cornelius V. (Sonny) Whitney, U. S. A. A. F., will share Box 27 with Mrs. Byron C. Foy and Mrs. Edgar V. Garbisch, the Chrysler heiresses, and Mrs. John T. Pratt.

Mrs. David Bruce Takes Box

Mrs. David K. E. Bruce, daughter of the late Andrew W. Mellon, and Mrs. Cornelius W. Dresselhuys, sister of Tommy Manville and asbestos heiress, are among the boxholders, too.

One of the most spectacular departures from usual diamond horseshoe proceedure stems directly from the war. That is the number of boxes in the parterre section that will be turned over to men in the armed services several nights during the week.

Army khaki, navy blue and Marine Corps olive drab is going to alternate with orchids and emeralds in the horseshoe section this season. The tickets will be distributed free of charge to enlisted men and officers with a hankering for good music.

The orchids will probably be scattered, but in recent years the emeralds in the horseshoe have been concentrated on Mme. Ganna Walska, the diva who finds it less toilsome to listen to opera from a box than to try to sing it from the stage.

Peggy Snowden Becomes Bride

Making their home temporarily in Miami Beach are Albert Ritzenberg, U. S. Army, and his bride, the former Miss Peggy Snowden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George I. Snowden.

Their marriage took place at the Georgian Hotel in Miami on November 16. He is a graduate of the University of North Carolina and a former captain of the tennis team there.

The bride is an alumnus of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina and has been an instructor of physical education at the Friends School.

Helen Kopff's Troth Is Told

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick L. Kopff announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Helen Margaret Kopff of Brooklyn to Cadet Richard T. Schlosberg, jr., son of Colonel Schlosberg, United States Army, and Mrs. Schlosberg of Arlington, Va.

Miss Kopff, whose father was formerly chief assistant district attorney in Brooklyn, studied at Berkeley Institute. She is a member of the Junior Guild of Colony House. The prospective bridegroom is attending the United States Military Academy. Their marriage will take place shortly after he is graduated in January.

Anne Coughlan Weds Elmer G. Goebel

Announcement is made of the wedding of Miss Ann D. Coughlan of Silver Spring, Md., to Elmer Gerald Goebel of Wheaton, Md., November 14 at St. John's Rectory in Forest Glen, Md.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Joseph Kennedy, pastor, in the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Coughlan, brother and sister-in-law of the bride, who were the attendants.

Mrs. Goebel, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Coughlan, is employed in the Library of Congress. Before his induction into the Army the early part of this week, Mr. Goebel was with the War Department. He was former clerk to the Board of Montgomery County Commissioners in the Fusion regime.

New York Couple Wed in Capital

Announcement has been made in New York by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hackett of the marriage in Washington of their daughter. Miss Jean Hackett, to H. Norman Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Harry Johnson of Yonkers.

The marriage was performed on November 12 in the First Baptist Church, with the Rev. Edward H. Pruden officiating. Mrs. Frank Stinchfield was the bride's only attendant and Peter Copeland Cantley of this city was best man.

Mrs. Johnson was graduated from Maryland College for Women and is with the Pan American Union here. The bridegroom attended Hamilton College and was graduated from Columbia University. He is on the staff of the British Ministry of Supply Mission. They will make their home here.

'I Married a Witch' Has Capitol Fun With Sorcery

An Able Cast Proves That Witchcraft Isn't Necessarily So Bad, After All; Sibyl Bowan and Cross and Dunn on Stage

LOVE VS. WITCHCRAFT constitutes the theme of the bizarre business. Neither, however, was as simple as it sounds.

The late Thorne Smith went back to the colonial witch-burnings in puritanical New England for the genesis of his story, now picturized by United Artists under the title of "I Married a Witch," and then traced the curse placed upon their persecutors by the victims down through the years to the present. The weird and wonderful results now are on view on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater.

The particular curse placed upon the tribe of Woolley was that none of the men in the line ever should be happily married. To make sure that it wouldn't stick, a sturdy oak was planted over the graves of the deceased offenders so that they would be imprisoned in its roots for all time and the Woolleys could come down the ages unmolested. But a stroke of lightning took care of that!

Released at first as a couple of puffs of white smoke, with voices but no material bodies, Daniel and Jennifer, the father and daughter who had outraged the simple colonials, set about catching up on their sorcery by haunting Mr. Wallace Woolley, the candidate for governor, who is about to marry the wrong girl in fulfillment of the family blight. He would have been better off, probably, if he had!

Reincarnated in modern, human form, Jennifer, as almost goes without saying, had other ideas. If anyone is going to pester Wallace for the rest of his mortal days, she prefers to be that one. As it turns out, the Hon. Mr. Woolley prefers the same thing—Jennifer having come back to this mortal coil a blonde!

But the possibilities for confusion worse confounded, with Daniel and Jennifer both exercising their presumably exorcised powers for evil, must be apparent. Daniel's constant exhortation to his offspring is, "Well, Jennifer, be a bad girl!" Which she certainly is, until that ol' debbil love raises its snugly head.

Not by any means another "Topper," "I Married a Witch," nevertheless, is a considerable exercise in the supernatural and the camera's ability to make it seem actual. Jennifer sails about on a broom in approved Halloween fashion; Daniel drives a taxicab up into the clouds, like a magic carpet, when police pursuit grows too hot, and both of them start fires convenient to their purposes by merely flipping a finger. In fact, Jennifer has herself quite a time learning to start one with a match. But her piece de resistance is winning Mr. Woolley a unanimous election to the governorship after he has been wholly discredited both politically and socially by his inability to rid his bedroom of the strange blonde the night before his wedding. The mysteriously tangled "wedding" scene, incidentally, marks the high point of the picture's comedy. And Jennifer, of course, marries the man and they live happily ever after—once she has corked father's smoke wraith up in a bottle of bourbon!

Nicely Managed By Excellent Cast

Whether or not "I Married a Witch" is as continuously and hilariously amusing as it should be, at least it is sufficiently novel in form and treatment to engage consistent interest. The principals are well equipped to get as much out of the Robert Pirosh-Marc Connelly script as they put in it. And Producer-Director Rene Clair has a decided flair for the successful encompassment of stories not averse to being fantastic, whether founded on witchcraft or whimsy. So it is quite a part and quite a performance that Fredric March contributes as the symbol of the Woolleys in all of their generations. And Veronica Lake makes the sort of witch that seems a less severe punishment than she had in mind. Cecil Kellaway, as the father, in a comic sorcerer of parts, and Robert Benchley, as the family physician, supplies a high flow of laughs in all of his too-few appearances. Susan Hayward, very properly, offers a portrait of a shrewish bride-to-be that adds to the obvious advantages of trading her for a frankly evil spirit. Robert Warwick, as the political boss, and Elizabeth Patterson, as Mr. Woolley's shocked and bewildered housekeeper, do ample justice to the only remaining roles of importance.

A blizzard to the north that left Bert Nagel & Co. snowbound at curtain time slightly curtailed yesterday's first performance of Gene Ford's high-powered stage revue, but that probably has been overcome by now. The stage bill is still high-powered. Headlined by Cross and Dunn and Sibyl Bowan, and including Columbus and Carroll, among the better of the ballroom dancers, it is virtually all-star in quality. Cross and Dunn, of course, have no peers as "song stylists." Each of their songs is not so much a song as a humorous recital of considerable dimensions. Their voices seem better than ever—especially in their unique operatic arrangement of that "Five O'Clock Whistle" number. The irrepressible Miss Bowan has added a new character impression or two to her repertoire since her last appearance on the same stage. Her Scandinavian prima donna is a gem and her "Volunteer Nurse" even better. For a closing, she gave yesterday's audience the optional choice of Mrs. Roosevelt or Gracie Fields. One guess. Two show-stoppers on one bill is pretty good, these days.

Sam Jack Kaufman's George M. Cohan overture, with vocal embellishments, and Art Brown's session with the crowd's vocal cords clicked heavily at the first show. The Fox Movietone News and "It's Everybody's War," bringing the battlefront right down into Main Street, with Henry Fonda as narrator, complete an unusual entertainment.

Witches Apparently Enjoy Waffles!

VERONICA LAKE AND FREDRIC MARCH as they appear, not too spookily, in the costellar roles of Paramount's picturization of Thorne Smith's "I Married a Witch," now on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater as chief feature for the week. Foremost among those of importance in supporting roles are Susan Hayward and Robert Benchley—not to mention Elizabeth Patterson and Cecil Kellaway

Abbott and Costello Do It Again As Two Comic Cops, at Keith's

By Ernest L. Schier

The obvious answer to the question posed by the title of the current attraction at RKO-Keith's, "Who Done It?" is Abbott and Costello.

With their terrifying talent for not only getting things done, but undone as well, the picture might be more aptly titled, "The Further Adventures of the Nonsense Boys." It would also seem, at this point, that there would be no further need to go into detail, but for the benefit of the more unenlightened moviegoer, we indulge in a paragraph, or two, to describe the present antics of the cinema pair who have made large portions of America laugh-happy.

Like the little boy who wanted to be a fireman, the Messrs. Abbott and Costello are enjoying all the whims of childhood by pretending to be, at various times on the screen, all the heroic figures around which we all used to build the play-acting of our more youthful days. Which may, or may not, account for their popularity. In "Buck Privates" they were soldiers, sailors "In the Navy," and cowboys in "Ride 'Em Cowboy." At the present time they have advanced to the stage of detectives. Despite these disguises they are at all times and places, comedians.

A Gale of Merriment

Adding sleuthing to their achievements, the boys continue the gale of merriment they set in motion a few years back. The best moments come at the beginning of the film which finds the duo as a pair of soda jerkers with radio ambitions, hard at work in Radio City. That is, hard on the customers. From there on they raise havoc at every point, street level to roof and in between.

A casual acquaintance with a script writer leads them into a genuine murder that takes place during a mystery program, and a genuine solution is arrived at, but not before a succession of gags and routines, ranging from pantomime to panic, take place.

Elevators, theater stages, electric light signs, and anything else that you can think of are enough to set the pair off into a brand-new improvisation or a dressed-up cliche that still hits the bull's-eye. When the smoke has cleared, the boys have received credit for catching the guilty one and walked off with a substantial radio prize.

If you are an Abbott and Costello addict, this is a "must" for you. If not, you will still enjoy Lou Costello mixing a malted milk or shooting out bulbs on a lighted sign while the murderer stalks his innocent prey.

A Valuable Co-Feature

William Gargan and William Bendix give additional support to the featured comedians as a pair of authentic detectives with a knack for getting nowhere fast. The juvenile roles are handled by Patric Knowles and Louise Allbritton. The balance of the cast includes Thomas Gomez, Jerome Cowan and Mary Wickes.

Director Erle Kenton keeps the many-sided story well in hand while maintaining a r.pid pace.

Of a different nature, but equally as important as the feature, is the latest of the "This Is America" series. Narrated in a most intelligent manner by Stage and Screen Actress Margo, "Women at War" is an impressive film pointing out the reasons so many women have voluntarily taken over certain jobs to relieve the manpower shortage and emphasizing the need for more and more women to replace men on the home front. There is enough dramatic power here to make every woman with time on her hands do some serious thinking.

Walt Disney's Pluto is the central character of this week's cartoon which, with the latest Pathe newsreel, rounds out an amusing program.

Actress' Protege Gets Own Disciple

This protege stuff is contagious. Patti Brilhantea, 19-year-old dancer who dances with Marjorie Reynolds in "Star Spangled Banner," is the protege of Dona Drake, darkhaired vixen who also is featured in the patriotic comedy.

Dona acts as Patti's confidential advisor.

Gossip From Gotham

New York, Nov 19.

The other night a Lieutenant Grant of the British navy came backstage at "By Jupiter," to see Constance Moore. He told her of his younger brother, Charles Grant of the RAF, who had been shot down over the Channel and who now is in a convalescent home in Britain . . . "I just had to see you, Miss Moore," the lieutenant stated, "and report this visit to Charles." He then explained by showing her a letter from his brother who now is blind. The letter reported that Charles' eyes failed him while he and the other patients were seeing the movie, "I Wanted Wings." And the last thing his eyes beheld was the face of Constance Moore.

CONSTANCE MOORE

"Popular Photography" awarded its $500 First Prize to a picture which appeared in Parade's Weekly. It shows a sergeant wearing his gas-mask and battle equipment advancing with pistol in hand. Behind him is a private. And 50 feet away, a dynamite explosion can be seen . . . This photo was made during the maneuvers at Fort Deyens. When the cameramen told the colonel they wanted such an action photo, he ruled that it was a bit too sensational to risk the lives of his soldiers. And so the cameramen posed for this picture themselves. The gas-masked photographer, W. Eugene Smith, can be seen releasing a cable. This was attached to his camera, timed for the explosion set off by the other gas-masked "Soldier"—cameraman Allan E. Sloane.

When President Roosevelt signed the first of the 1,000,000 scrolls of greetings to the Soviet people he also sent a personal contribution to Russian War Relief . . . Commander Frank Wead, who wrote "Test Pilot," "Dirigible," "Ceiling Zero" and "Hell Divers," has been given a leave of absence by the Navy Department to write the screenplay of "They Were Expendable" . . . Last weekend the Book-of-the-Month Club's editors read Richard Tregaskis' "Guadalcanal Diary" and immediately decided to pair it with Norman Angell's "Let the People Know" as the Febuary dual selections

Sam Goldwyn watched a group of writers who are collaborating on ideas for the Danny Kaye picture, which Goldwyn will produce. The writers were discussing the plot amiably and calmly. "I don't like the way you're doing it," Goldwyn criticized . . . "But we seem to be making progress," the producer was told . . . "Yeah, but you're all too polite to each other," Sam told them. "Remember—when everybody is polite, out comes a polite picture."

David Selznick, who assigned his important contracts to Twentieth Century-Fox, will not have a post with that studio, but will continue to operate independently . . . Frenchmen, who've just arrived from Vichy, report that Darlan's son, who is supposed to have been stricken in Algiers, isn't there—but is resting comfortably at the Institut Pasteur in Paris . . . The Selective Service questionnaire filled out by Robert E. Sherwood lists as the person to be notified in case of emergency, etc., "President Roosevelt" . . . Marine Corps officials in Washington, with whom Tyrone Power had an appointment, needed cops to get them through the mob.

John R. Longo, who once went to jail in New Jersey during a political battle against Mayor Hague, now is more confused than ever . . . Some months ago, at the Senate committee hearing on the Federal bench appointment of Hague's man, Thomas Meaney, Longo clashed with Senator Smathers . . . He recently was dismissed as asst. supt. of elections in Hudson County when he supported Smathers while his boss was supporting the Republican candidate, Hawkes. "It's all mixed up now," said Longo to the man who fired him. "I am a Democrat backing Smathers, but opposed to Hague. You're a Republican, opposing Smathes, but backing Hague."

A few seasons ago "Johnny Belinda" was one of the hit plays on Broadway. The principal role is that of a deaf mute girl. In the last scene of the play, she finally utters a word—"Johnny"—the name of her lover. Helen Craig played the role originally, and it made a star of her. When she left the cast, she was replaced by Jean Platt, who played the role for the rest of the long run . . . A Yiddish version of that play is about to be presented in a Yiddish theater in Brooklyn. The producers induced Jean Platt to play the leading role again, inasmuch as the acting required of her is all in pantomime. For this version, naturally, the last line has been changed. And Miss Platt now is rehearsing the correct pronunciation of the one word she must speak—"Yonkela."

Old-Timer Actor Wears Fancy Togs

For the first time in 80 pictures, Clem Bevans wears a dinner jacket for several scenes in "Happy Go Lucky," now filming at Paramount with Mary Martin, Dick Powell, Rudy Vallee, Betty Hutton and Eddie Bracken in top roles.

Clem usually plays a desert rat or a backwoodsman. He says himself he has the kind of a face that goes with tired clothes. Anyway, they've never let him dress up on the screen before and he's taking it big. Every time he passes a set mirror he beams upon his tidy reflection and fondly adjusts his tie. There is another statistical fact to be noted about the Bevans part in "Happy Go Lucky." He will be billed as Mr. J. M. Smith and this is the twentieth time he has been a Mr. Smith for the movies.

Columbia

While interest in the African war front moves west from Cairo, Washington's interest in "Cairo" moves east on F Street. The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer comedy of espionage and mistaken identities opened yesterday on the screen at Loew's Columbia Theater as chief screen feature for the new week.

The superlative talents of a distinguished cast may run a bit ahead of the material with which they are engaged in this frivolous subject, but it still has its occasional moments of fast action and furious fun. It all comes about when a smalltown newspaper man is designated to cover the Egyptian front as correspondent for a string of back-home, "hick" papers. Counseled by another victim of a convoy bombing, Homer Smith arrives at his destination armed with a precious cargo of misinformation, which causes him to mistake an American picture star for the feminine head of a spy ring—and vice versa.

As butler in Marcia Warren's villa, he comes abreast of the real enemy agents and lets himself in for a succession of complications that firmly go so far as an attack on a United States troop ship by a radio-controlled plane loaded with high explosives. That doesn't quite come off, but something equally as exciting—and quite as unbelievable does when the villians are trapped in the pyramids. The purpose is not to have you believe it, but merely laugh at, and with, it.

Jeanette MacDonald, Robert Young, Ethel Waters, Reginald Owen, Grant Mitchell, Lionel Atwill, Edward Ciannelli and Mona Barrie are those principally involved in the goings-on. The presence of Miss MacDonald and Ethel Waters should be assurance enough that there is some nice singing during the course of the proceedings. There is.

Th new bill also includes its usual grist of short-reel subjects to round out an agreeable means of slaying an hour or two.

New Angle to Old Fad

There's nothing new about the hobby of collecting books—but youthful star Roddy McDowall has supplied a new twist to the old fad.

Of Roddy's eight Hollywood pictures, five have been based on literary best-sellers. The English lad hit upon the idea of having copies of the books signed by author, director and cast of each film.

Canteen Is Pride of Filmdom

Hollywood, Calif., Nov. 19.—Now that the Hollywood canteen has been running two months, it seems like a good time to look over the record — and, I might add, it's quite a record. They've served more than 250,000 soldiers, sailors and Marines with 300,000 sandwiches, 60,000 gallons of orange juice, 150,000 packages of cigarettes, 800 pounds of butter, 300 pounds of coffee.

FRED MacMURRAY

Many of us who thought Hollywood stars would start out with a great flourish and then drop out when they found the canteen meant honest to goodness hard work, are eating our words. Some of the regulars include Fred MacMurray, Dinah Shore, Marlene Dietrich, Jean Gabin, Tony Quinn, Deanna Durbin, Kay Kyser and his band haven't missed a single Saturday night. Mrs. John Ford, whose director husband is serving overseas, is an unceasing worker. She arrives every morning at 9, and works all day getting things ready.

One of the most popular features of the canteen is the service of studio secretaries, who come there (after working all day in offices) and type letters for the boys. Girls say they've averaged 327 letters a night to home folks all over the U. S. A. Hats off for a great job!

Dorothy Lamour gets away from South Seas, sarongs and names like Aloma, Ulah, Mrama, Tura and so on. In "Dixie" she's just plain Millie Cook.

Incidentally, Paul Jones, the producer of that picture, carried the banner in a minstrel show 33 years ago, so when they did the minstrel show sequence, which is the highlight of this, he put on blackface and did the same again.

Bob Hope will have done 50 shows on the Army camp tour by the time he gets back here for Christmas.

Betty Grable and the "Coney Island" company go on location at Venice. Betty will entertain 30 soldiers on the various rides and other amusements in between shots.

Other day when a soldier visiting on that set was asked to pose with Betty and kiss her, for a still picture, he was so nervous that he couldn't deliver the kiss—all he could do was hold her hand!

In 1911 a charming couple from Boston started a home on the desert and raised turkeys for a living, specializing in fat birds that have taken prizes everywhere. This year they have 4500 ready for the market, but no pickers.

Beulah Bondi and several Hollywood actresses volunteered, but the birds will have to be shipped alive to nearby towns—but none to Los Angeles, where last year one market alone sold five tons. Owners don't know what price they can ask—their whole year's work may have to be thrown into the discard.

Michael's Girl

By SOPHIE KERR

CHAPTER 37

IT was fine to have Van speak like that, unsurprised at his father's sudden new taste for garden work. No one else said anything. Michael had sent word to Elin through Patsy about the potatoes and the pruning, but Elin guessed that Philip would hate to have it mentioned. Her reason told her there was no true back-to-nature inclination in Philip's make-up and that this way it was only an expedient to fill his empty hours. At least it was better for him than to mope about the house all day. Elin was too rushed with what she must do at home and the position at the library to give Philip much attention or thought beyond being thankful that now he had found something harmless to do. She had no idea of the turn of his spirit, nor how this harmless work helped it.

Nor, at first, had Philip himself. The shears cut the stiff dead wood in the hedge and also cut into his grudge against Douglas Coulter, his anger against Channing Park, his bitter humiliation from Katie Thomson, his futile resentment at the fall of his fortunes. These were the big things and gradually, as he worked, their wounds were somehow lighter and not too hard to bear. He cut away smaller bad memories: the impudent servants on that grandiose place in Long Island, the men and women who had gathered round him there but had not said a word when he was sick and bankrupt—it occurred to him now that many of them might very well have gone bankrupt, too. It was all dead wood, he thought, and might be cut and burned and forgotten.

There was more dead wood that he cut out, gradually, to be sure, and not completely, but at least in part. This was the dead wood of his one-sided schemes to remake his wealth. As he worked, day after day, in the open air, his muscles hardening, his skin turning brown from sun and autumn wind, his mind hardened to the possibility of getting a small, routine job somewhere and dropping the pretense that he was and must inevitably be a financial colossus. He even wished—at times—that he had saved the money he'd got from the Bryant silver and the Bryant cellar and put it into the household maintenance funds. He found himself thinking regretfully of his grandfather's beautiful heavy gold watch—melted up now, he supposed, a little lump of rough, yellow bullion, without meaning, without association. God, how he wished he'd saved that watch! It should have gone to Van.

Determines Van Will Go to College

There he was, back to Van. In another year the boy would be through high school. He must go to college. There was a scholarship Van talked about, but Don Kelley was trying for it—"And he's a lot smarter than I am," Van admitted candidly. "He studies harder, too." Philip thought fiercely, I don't want Van to go on a scholarship, or work his way through like the half-starved grinds I used to see around the campus! I want my son to go to college in the right way—the way I did, without a care on his mind.

It never occurred to him that Van might be better off under handicaps and responsibilities; no, it was only shameful that he couldn't do as much for Van as his father had done for him! But—if he could find a job, any kind of job with a salary attached, he would save, he would do without everything himself . . . he would endure the looks and comments of men who'd known him in his height. . . . The shears nipped steadily along the hedge and the project of steady, dull, routine, futureless work was snipped ever more and more surely in Philip Bryant's mind. But the shears could not snip into that mind any willingness to take Elin into his confidence. He could not yet forgive her patience and forbearance toward him. He must show her that he could accomplish something solid on his own plan.

Now he began going in to the city every morning of good weather to look for work. He still had two handsome English suitcases and these he took with him on his first day and pawned them along with a silver cigarette box and two silver picture frames from his own room, to get money for a commutation ticket and newspapers and a weekly haircut. On the train he read the advertisements and arranged them methodically — agents, clerks, cashiers, canvassers, salesmen, solicitors—and he found every place swamped with applicants, many of them plainly far more in need than Philip Bryant, and many more of them plainly more competent. He exhausted the things he thought he could do and tried for jobs far out of his experience, but everywhere it was the same—hundreds of men clamoring, begging for work and only a few placed to be filled. Many of the jobs were fake—canvassers must pay good sums for a "necessary outfit," agents must buy their own "samples," salesmen must "leave a deposit to guarantee their character." Only a man far more guileless than Philip could have been taken in by such devices.

After a morning spent on such a fruitless, discouraging search he would come home and give the afternoon to working on his hedge. It kept him sane; it kept him determined. He had made a bet with himself—that before the hedge was done he would find a place. And he would not appeal to any man he knew; he would stand on his own feet and discover, once and for all, if he was the sort who must be helped from outside, or if he could be independent, even in a meager way, it astonished and amused him ironically to find himself so determined on this one thing. He had never before thought it important. The men he rubbed elbows with in crowded anterooms, the shabby, avid, hungry men with fear in their eyes, brought home this importance to him now.

Blind Advertisement Results in Job

At last, when his ticket was nearly out—and his courage, too—he found a job. He had answered a blind advertisement for "a man who knows the financial field and is capable of dealing with banks and business tenants for a large owner of city real estate," had answered it begrudging the stamp for he expected nothing from it. But he was shortly summoned to a musty office in a downtown loft building to be faced by old Hendrick Derboek, the strange, mean old legend of Wall and Nassau Streets in the tradition of Russell Sage and Hetty Green. Derboek was very frail and old, but he sat behind his battered pine desk and looked at Philip with eyes that were not old at all, but keen and suspicious and intelligent. Behind him sat his secretary, a fattish, pale gnome of a woman, obviously a bullied, baited slave.

Hendrick Derboek wanted a man to do his leg work, carry his messages and deal with his interests, not an office boy, but someone familiar with banking and finance and real estate. As he stated his wants in words as stingy as if they were gold pieces, Philip thought of Scrooge. There's nothing here for me, he thought and he snapped answers back, as short, as sharp as the old man's questions. Yes, he knew the Mammoth Bank, he knew Smith, the chairman of the Board, and Brown and Robinson, directors. Yes, he knew the private bankers, Budd, Cating and Company. Yes, he knew the bond house, Gallere Brothers—and all the other big brokers left. No, he didn't know anything about city real estate.

Finally Hendrick Derboek paused. Then: "Why are you looking for a job?"

"I'm bankrupt and broke."

"Your influential friends won't do anything for you?"

"I haven't asked them."

"What wages do you want?"

"All I can get."

The old man put his waxen fingertips together, meditating. "I'll check up on whether you really do know the people you claim to know. I'll notify you if I want you. The job here pays $40 a week, hours 9 to 5:30. That's all today. G'by."

Carelessness Blamed for Fake Blackout

Careless reading of orders, failure to heed news accounts and indulgence in rumor-mongering were declared by civilian defense officials yesterday to be the cause of the false blackout alert that spread through the District and Prince Georges County Wednesday night.

All through the autumn, they pointed out, Wednesday night has been given over to the training of the defensive services in air-raid drills with which the general public was not to be concerned. Why, after all these weeks, the sight of helmeted wardens going through their paces should excite the public into thinking that a surprise test was due, defense officials could not explain.

Nor could they tell why some of the wardens themselves, who had received their written instructions, should suddenly start telling startled citizens to get off the streets and to put out their lights.

Some isolated sirens went off by mistake, but there was no official or concerted sounding of the sirens and horns that must herald a blackout contest.

The sirens in Prince Georges County were sounded because J. Robert Sherwood, chairman of that civilian defense area, apparently misinterpreted the instructions, which read: "It will be assumed that the red is sounded at 8 p. m. and the all clear at 9 p. m." A call into the District control center settled the question, and Prince Georges had its individual "all clear" at 8:35.

Navy Yard officials wanted it known last night that it was not their horn this time that upset the Southeast section.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

For players who aspire to master and life-master rank and those who play just for fun, we have selected today's three problems. The first two concern doubling during the bidding, always a touchy point, and the last requires careful play at a slam contract.

1. Sitting South, you hold these cards:

3. The question concerns your play of today's hand. You hold the

6 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Q ◇.

South cards at a six-heart contract and West opens the queen of diamonds. How do you go about taking 12 tricks? The solution is presented below.

Answers to Quiz

1. North has made an optional double and South may or may not bid according to his hand. In this situation his best strategy is to make a takeout bid of four hearts. Many players pass an optional double of a three-bid, holding a weak hand, so as to avoid risking a set. They likewise pass with a strong hand, including strength in the adversaries' suit, in an effort to win a penalty score. However, with a five-card suit and about 1½ high-card tricks, or with a six-card suit and 1 high-card trick, a suit takeout is usually made.

2. South would be wise to jump to four hearts with his fine holding. As he has five cards to his partner's suit, a singleton in the opponents' suit and outside strength, game looks very possible even if North has a bare minimum. Even if the hand is defeated it shouldn't be by much. By bidding four hearts South makes certain that game is reached, for his partner may pass two hearts or even a jump bid of three hearts if his hand is very poor.

3. Declarer wins his small slam by making a trump safety play. After winning the opening lead of the diamond queen with the king in the closed hand, South sees that it is possible for him to lose his contract if one of the defenders holds all four of the outstanding trumps. If such is the case and declarer immediately cashes the heart ace, he will lose two trump tricks, provided East happens to hold the four trumps. On the other hand, declarer will likewise lose two tricks by playing the trump king, if West has the missing hearts.

Declarer's proper play is to lead a small trump from his hand after winning the first trick, and finesse a low heart on the board, thus safeguarding the contract against any possible distribution. The first round of trumps is won in dummy, as West plays small. Next the ace and king of hearts are cashed and South can concede West the heart queen and claim the balance for six-odd. The rest of his cards are high.

Ballet Theater and Symphony Join in Effective Performance

National Symphony Orchestra collaborates with the Ballet Theater on Thursday night in Constitution Hall. Program: Swan Lake (music by Chaikovski), Billy the Kid (music by Aaron Copland), Aleko (music by Chaikovski). Conductor: Antal Dorati.

Again the Ballet Theater and the National Symphony Orchestra combined their forces effectively last evening in Constitution Hall, which held a large and demonstrative assemblage of spectators. As on the previous night, there was every reason for giving the troupe of dancers extra credit for the manner in which they presented their ballets under many disadvantages of staging and without the glamour of scenery. Of their three offerings one may pass over "Swan Lake" as a familiar and thoroughly commented thing, and concentrate upon the two novelties.

BROWN

"Billy the Kid," seen here for the first time, was originally the creation of Eugene Loring when he was with the American Ballet Caravan, and had its premiere in Chicago four years ago. The Ballet Theater version of the work was done by David Nillo, who reconstructed the choreography from memory and made a good job of it. For the completely American subject of the boy bandit whose brief career ran just after the Civil War, Aaron Copland's music provides the right combination of brutal vigor and wistful sentiment that surrounds the theme.

Ian Gibson, one of the finest classical dancers in the company, was a little out of his element in the title role. His characterization was commendable, although far from being on a par with Eugene Loring's memorable impersonation. The company evoked the Far West atmosphere of pioneer days successfully, and the dancing had a lively uncouthness about it. Mr. Copland's music is too much overlaid with dissonance, but the essential themes are sensitive and tender, and if the harmonies had been less salient, their beauties would be apparent to the average ear.

Leonid Miassin's "Aleko" is a curious admixture of materials, as the title is taken from an opera by Rakhmaninov and the story from a poem by Pushkin, while the music is the late Frederick Stock's orchestration of Chaikovski's piano trio in A minor dedicated to the memory of Nikolai Rubinstein. But these elements have been combined in a striking ballet which is one of his best productions. He has made a thrilling spectacle of the tale about a youth who joined a band of gypsies, fell in love with the "King's" daughter, went mad when she jilted him for a handsomer gypsy, and killed them both.

Chaikovski's melancholy music accompanies this with singular felicity. Miassin, who tends to expansiveness in the grotesque, has overdone the third scene of Aleko's delirium, but that is the only fault to be found with the production. The choreography has some extraordinary moments, such as the first scene where the father of Zemphira stands on one side of the stage watching Aleko's wooing with a premonition of tragedy, and the other side is occupied by a gay group of gypsies around the campfire. Antony Tudor was the father, and his interpretation of the part was an exhibit of subtle, self-effacing and powerfully dramatic intensity.

Pan-American Unity Stressed At Bar Session

The power and unity of the Pan-American republics were extolled by speakers at the joint luncheon yesterday of the Inter-American Bar Association and the Federal Bar Association of the District.

Legal notables of many Central and South American nations are here for the three-day meeting of the council and committees of the Inter-American association—which is a federation of the bar organizations of the American continents.

Quoting the adage, "In union there is strength," Attorney General Biddle said the people of the Americas have achieved "union without uniformity."

Hails D. C. as World Capital

The president of the Brazilian Bar Association, Dr. Edmundo de Miranda Jordao, hailed Washington as "not only the capital of the United States, in these times of war, but of the whole world."

Dr. Jordao asserted the enduring mutual devotion between his country and the United States. This has been unbroken, he recalled, since our prompt recognition of Brazilian independence in 1822 and was attested by his government's pledge to President Wilson when we declared war in 1917.

"Our doctrine today," said Dr. Jordao, "has been declared by President Vargas, who said: 'We must rely upon the prophetic vision of President Roosevelt, the great leader of the American people.'"

Rep. Sumners Sounds Warning

Amid applause, Dr. Jordao concluded: "Brazilians will defend the principles of free government, not only in America but in the whole world."

Representative Hatton Sumners, chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, said the destiny of the Americas depended upon mutual understanding, but cautioned: "I don't like to hear leaders and the people saying, 'We are bound to win.' That isn't what makes people stand together. What we have got to face is the possibility that we might lose. There is not a spot in the Americas that is not in danger;"

Dr. J. Blanco Uztariz of Venezuela, who spoke in Spanish, declared that the duration of peace when the war is won would require the establishment of the principles of justice, to which the deliberations of the legal men in the Inter-American association were a great contribution.

Canadian Also Speaks

Also a speaker was Leon Mercier Govin, K. C., Canadian Senator and president of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs.

The addresses were translated and recorded for radio broadcast to South America.

Committees of the Inter-American Association will meet today at the Pan American Union. Dr. Jordao will be honored with a reception at the Mayflower this afternoon and will preside at a dinner in the evening.

Vickery Scores Boastful Ship Concern

The Maritime Commision said yesterday the Pacific Bridge Co., Alameda, Calif., which recently claimed a shipbuilding record by launching a small cargo ship 80 hours after keel-laying, is approximately five months behind schedule.

Rear Admiral Howard L. Vickery, vice chairman of the commission, said the commission "is not satisfied with the performance of the Pacific Bridge Co."

"Its contracts called for the company to furnish all materials and the commission has done everything possible to expedite performance of contracts," he said. "Launching of ships means little. It is the delivery of completed vessels that counts in this all-out war effort."

The company has maintained its schedule in launching ships, the commision said, but has not completed and delivered into service any of the nine vessels that have been launched.

Grand Jury Questions Deatherage

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

George E. Deatherage, one of the natie Fascist agitators who maintained contact with the Nazi government in conferences with Baron Ulrich von Gienanth of the German Embassy here, was questioned yesterday before the District Grand Jury.

Special Prosecutor William Power Maloney instructed Deatherage to be back at Judiciary Square for further examination Monday. Deatherage was called as a Government witness in the current investigation of seditious and treasonable activities.

Deatherage professed fear that he himself would be indicted, and was accompanied to the court house by Attorney John T. Bonner, who declined to discuss the investigation, but pointed out that Deatherage voluntarily came from Mississippi to give the grand jurors the benefit of his testimony.

Maloney and Special Prosecutor John T. M. Reddan reopened the sedition inquiry last week, under the direction of the chief of the criminal division, Assistant Attorney General Wendell Berge, who led the investigation that brought indictment of 28 alleged seditious conspirators earlier this year.

Children Safe, Woman Sought In Kidnaping

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Nov. 19.—A woman in green slacks was sought throughout southern California today by police investigating the bludgeoning of Mrs. Inez Maclam, 24, the kidnaping of her three children and the theft of her car.

Mrs. Maclam, whose husband recently was sentenced to San Quentin Prison for robbery, is in critical condition in a San Diego hospital. The children and the car have been recovered.

Police identified the woman sought as Mrs. Margaret Wallace, 26. Lieuts. Thomas Bryan and F. A. Davis said she fled yesterday from a "share the ride" car destined for Oklahoma City, abandoning Judith Rae Maclam, 6 weeks old, after she became suspicious that police had been notified.

Mrs. Maclam's two other children, Kay Rose, 4, and Clark Edward, 13 months, were abandoned Tuesday at the Union Railroad Station here. None had been harmed.

The attack on Mrs. Maclam occurred near San Diego Monday night. Mrs. Maclam told police that she and the three children had been driving with Mrs. Wallace to the border city.

At Encinitas they stopped to look out over a promontory, Mrs. Maclam said. She was struck from behind with a rock and fell or was shoved over an 80-foot bluff. She was found the next morning.

Aged Hermits Buy N.Y. Home to Avert Eviction

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 19.—The brothers Collyer, who lived as hermits for decades in the world's greatest metropolis, are no longer in danger of being drawn from their barricaded home into a world nearly as far from them as the moon.

The aged recluses—Langley and ailing Homer—were guaranteed continued isolation yesterday when Langley indorsed a check with a pen borrowed from a deputy sheriff.

The check bought the house, which the brothers rarely left and which is said to contain 17 grand pianos and 15,000 medical books.

A crowd watched eagerly as sheriffs, policemen, carpenters and lawyers tried for hours to get inside through blocked doors. Finally, the callers entered through a window, and were greeted by a thin voice:

"What is the meaning of this?"

It was Langley, picking his way down through crates and cartons which fortified the stairway.

"I am the sheriff," replied one of the callers.

He gave the old man an eviction order obtained by a bank which had foreclosed on the mortgage.

The Collyer lawyer, John McMullen, who volunteered his services months ago, produced a check given Langley by the city representing a tax refund, and induced the recluse to sign it.
